YEARS.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY H. B. H.

Years, careless years! ere life knew aught of sorrow;
When every day was bright,
And peaceful every night,
And faith was strong and hopeful for the morrow.

Years, happy years! when life was one long morning;
When hope her roundelay
Sang o'er our blithesome way,
And pleasant flowers were all the path adorning.

Years, dreamy years! when Love with witching finger
Wove his enchanting web
Of subtle, unseen thread—
Around those hours the memory loves to linger.

Years, busy years! when life brings forth its treasures
Of high and noble deeds
Of which youth sowed the seeds;
Ah, here we find sincerest, purest pleasures.

Years, waning years! when, the ripe harvest reaping
Of hours of care and toil,
We cease from strife and moil;
We wait for rest—the rest which comes by sleeping.

Years, useless years! when the tired hands, no longer
The instincts of the will
With energy fulfill,
But feebly droop—the tired hands work no longer.

Years, endless years! of love and peace immortal:
Fear not the dark'ning vale—
Let not your courage fail—
'Tis but the entrance to the heavenly portal.

CHAPTER XVII.

O Heaven! that such companions thou'dst unfold,
And put in every honest hand a whip,
To lash the rascals naked through the world.
—SHAKESPEARE.

Mr. Johann Wilfer glared vengefully at the smooth, serene face of his assailant, and, struggling still, breathed out, with an accompaniment of choice oaths, the question:

"Who are you, and what do you want?"

"A question we will waive for the present, my good friend," replied the gentleman above him. "Are you going to struggle much longer? Because, if so, I shall be under the necessity of quieting you by an exhibition of force, which you will find more surprising than pleasant. Oh, you decide on taking things quietly, do you? I applaud your wisdom. Have the goodness to rise, my philosophic footpad, and we will confer in more convenient attitudes."

Whereupon the gentleman, who was no other than Mr. Jasper Vermont, released Mr. Johann's throat from the pressure of his knee and allowed him to rise, which Mr. Johann Wilfer did with an extremely puzzled and sullen look, and, having risen, stood silently and evilly regarding his new acquaintance.

"Soh!" said Mr. Jasper, eyeing him calmly, and proceeding while he spoke to light a cigar and get it into full blast deliberately—"soh! now we are on our feet again, we look—well, I am bound to admit, none the less ruffianly. My friend, what is your name?"

Mr. Johann Wilfer tugged at his ragged neckcloth, which, during the struggle, had become inconveniently tightened, and glared savagely as he replied insolently:

"And what is that to you?"

"Not much," replied Mr. Jasper politely. "A little pardonable curiosity, my friend, which I think you will do well to satisfy. I fancy, though, I have seen your face before. Let me think," and he tapped his white, wrinkleless forehead with a neatly-gloved forefinger. "Were you ever at Canterbury, at a little inn, on the outskirts of the town, on a July night in 18—? On a beautiful moonlight night, my friend?"

Mr. Wilfer started, turned pale, and shook his head.

"Never!" he said. "You've made a mistake."

"I thought you were," said Mr. Jasper cheerfully and triumphantly, as if the man had fully admitted it. "You don't tell an untruth well. If a man can't do that well, he had always better stick to the truth. At a little inn in Canterbury. How strange we should meet again! Let me think: I seem to remember something else—my memory is particularly good, my friend; particularly good, I am thankful to say—and it does not play me false, I think I can remember that the gentleman whom I had the pleasure to see in such charming company at the inn in Canterbury was a sort of artist, picture-restorer, and 'canvas humbug,' as the picture-dealers call it, a manufacturer of pretended old masters, Raphaels, Titians, Rubenses—by the way, I saw an excellent specimen of that sort of thing to-day. A Rubens, figure of a soldier, which a gentleman sold to the Countess of Merivale for three hundred pounds. Genuine, of course! Oh, yes, the gentleman gave a warranty with it, signed, sealed and delivered. I did hear the gentleman's name—or did I dream it? Was it Wilfer—Johann Wilfer?"

Mr. Wilfer changed to a pretty olive green, and stared harder than ever.

"Who the fiend are you?" he commenced; but Mr. Jasper's smooth voice broke in and stopped him:

"I was right, I see! What a strange coincidence that we should meet, Mr. Wilfer; that I should see your admirable Rubens in the morning, and run against—to say nothing of knocking down—the manufacturer in the evening."

"Come, stow it," snarled Mr. Wilfer, driven to desperation at last. "I don't know who you are, and I don't care if you're the old 'un himself; but there's enough of this. What's your game? What's the particular lay you're on with me? What's the move that you should come and crow it over a man like this? S'pose you did see me in a pub. at Canterbury along of a young party; s'pose I am an artist, and I did sell an old master, what's that to you? What business is it of yours that you should come interposing between two gentlemen, and assaulting me in this style? You must be mad, guv'nor; but mad or straight, you're on the wrong lay with me, that I tell you right away. Now, then!"

"Finished?" asked Mr. Jasper with a pleasant smile. "An excellent piece of reasoning, Mr. Wilfer, but faulty in one particular: I am not on the wrong lay, as you inelegantly term it, and it is of some small matter to me that I should meet you and interfere with your little business between gentlemen."

"Oh, it is, is it?" snarled Mr. Wilfer. "Then," mocking the pleasant smile and smooth voice—"then you'll have the goodness to keep the reasons to yourself, and let me go on. I don't know, and, what's more, I don't want to; but if I do, mind you, it will be to pay off the score; and if I ever do that, I'll do it complete. Mark that, Mr. Know All."

"Threatening bodily harm!" murmured Mr. Jasper sweetly.

Then, as Mr. Wilfer essayed to push past him, he took his cigar from his mouth, blew a puff of smoke in an insulting manner full in the man's face, and in a cool and commanding tone said:

"Stand back; go and sit on the bench. I haven't done with you, Mr. Wilfer."

"Suppose I say I shan't," returned Mr. Wilfer, eyeing him savagely.

"Then," said Mr. Jasper, leaning against the railings, "I call the police."

"Call 'em!" almost shouted Mr. Wilfer, with a discordant laugh. "That's a bogy for children! What's the police to me as I should be scared by 'em?"

"A great deal," said Mr. Jasper. "For instance, say that you are mad enough to refuse my offer of a seat. I call the police, they arrive, and find me struggling with a low-looking fellow, with footpad on his elegant countenance (you compel me to be personal, my friend), whom I instantly give in charge for committing a highway robbery upon my friend Mr. Leroy, who has gone in search of assistance. The footpad denies it vociferously, but appearances are against him; and to make the evidence complete, I pick up from the grass Mr. Leroy's gold watch and chain, which had fallen from the footpad's hands."

And as he spoke he stooped and picked up Adrien's watch, which had fallen from his pocket when he flung Mr. Wilfer aside, and which Mr. Jasper's quick eyes had seen on the grass, and he had allowed to remain there till he could use the circumstance as now. Mr. Wilfer eyed the watch and the thickly-meshed net drawn around him, and gave in.

"Curse you!" he said. "You are a knowing one."

"Thank you; a genuine if not graceful compliment from a candid foe is peculiarly grateful. And now you are seated, and we may continue our agreeable conversation more comfortably, allow me to ask you the nature of your business with my friend Mr. Leroy."

The man looked up at the smooth but masterful tormentor, and inwardly acknowledged the superiority. He answered slowly, but to the point:

"I'm thinking you heard the whole of the palaver, guv'nor; so the question aint necessary. But, if you will have me tell you why, then I was inquiring after a young niece of mine, a young girl your precious friend as been and decoyed from her home."

Mr. Jasper's eyes gleamed, then hid themselves under their lids.

"Can you prove that he acted as you say?" he said quietly.

"I can," replied Mr. Wilfer doggedly.

"How?" asked Mr. Jasper. "Take a cigar," and he extended an elegantly-mounted cigar-case to his victim.

Mr. Wilfer eyed the elaborate trifle sullenly for a moment, then he took a cigar and bit its end viciously. Mr. Jasper extracted a fusee from a silver box and threw it to him, watching him light the cigar as a jailer might watch his prisoner eating his crust of bread.

"Now," said Mr. Jasper after a pause, during which Mr. Wilfer puffed at the cigar with dogged silence—"now," he continued, "your address is Cracknell Court, Soho—don't trouble to deny it, my friend, or make a change of residence, for, though you moved to the Arctic regions, I should find you. I know where to lay my hand upon anyone I want—convenient, is it not?—and I shall in all probability require you, Mr. Wilfer. When I do, then will be your opportunity for revenge. Until then, take care of yourself, I mean don't get into trouble, and be more careful with your sham Rubens; written warranties are dangerous things, and this one of yours which I have in my pocket is quite enough to send you to prison for a pleasant twelvemonth."

"And the girl?" said Mr. Wilfer after a moment's silence. "What's to become of her?"

"You mean what is to become of the money you receive for her maintenance?" corrected Mr. Jasper with a smile. "Well, we'll see. Now good-night. I have an engagement; and remember, I can lay my hand on you when I want you; and when I send for you, be careful that you come without the loss of a moment. You have no wings, or I should require you to fly. Good-night!"

With that impressive farewell, Mr. Jasper turned on his heel. Mr. Wilfer looked after him in moody silence for a few moments, then departed likewise.

"Strange," said Mr. Jasper to his cigar—"strange how things work round for you, Jasper, my boy! That princely idiot plays into your hands at every turn. What luck, that of all nights in the week, I should run across him here, and take it into my head to follow him."

And, humming a few lines of Madame Haidee's last popular song, he made his way to the theatre.

"Good-night," said Adrien a few hours afterwards as they stood before his cab. "What is the time?" and he felt for his watch.

"I don't know," said Jasper; "mine has stopped."

"Nor I," remarked Adrien quietly. "For I think I have lost my watch."

"What!" exclaimed Jasper. "That valuable repeater of yours? What a pity!"

"Is it not?" said Adrien thoughfully. "I wonder —— Ah, I think I lost it in the park."

Mr. Jasper looked sympathizing.

"What a bore! Well, it's a good job a watch or two to the bad doesn't matter with you, my prince."

Adrien smiled; then, ever thoughtful, said: "By the way, have you found the papers Jackson tells me you lost in the theatre the other night?"

"No," answered Mr. Jasper, and a slight flush of annoyance crossed his brow—"no, I have not. Jackson told, did he? No, I dropped them somewhere from the green-room to Haidee's brougham, and I suppose I must look upon them as gone forever."

"I hope not," said Adrien.

"No consequence," said Mr. Jasper as the cab rattled off.

No consequence, Mr. Jasper Vermont! Of so much consequence that you would give a thousand pounds of your dearly loved money this instant to have those papers safely clutched in your hand! But at present they are lying on the bosom of a wandering, homeless girl, and whither they are drifting who shall say?

CHAPTER XVIII.

The next morning, while Adrien Leroy was standing before his glass putting the finishing touches to the toilet which Mr. Norgate had conducted with great care, and thinking of the girl Reah and her ruffianly guardian, a servant appeared with a dainty little note marked "Immediate."

The envelope bore no crest, for Lady Eveline used none in her correspondence with Adrien Leroy, from prudential motives; but Adrien knew the handwriting, and, setting down the head-brush, opened the faintly-scented missive and perused it:

"DEAR ADRIEN: I shall spend the day with Aunt Rose, at Hampton. Will you keep your promise?"

"I will," murmured Adrien, remembering that he had promised the beauful Eveline that, on her next visit to the convenient Lady Rose, at Hampton Court, he would meet her there and take her in his light pleasure-boat up to some of the pretty islands farther up the river, and spend the day in a delicious "dolce far niente."

"Dear Eveline," he wrote back with his pencil, "I will ride down to Hampton and keep the promise, which came rather from you, from whom my happiness springs. ADRIEN."

Then, having despatched the Merivale servant, he went into the cabinet to breakfast, and ordered his favorite cob to be brought round in an hour.

It was a splendid morning, just bright and hot enough to make visions of the cool, sweet river particularly welcome, and the man of pleasure determined to cast off the melancholy which had overshadowed him lately, and take the day as it came—happily.

"I shall enjoy a row on the river. Eveline is never so happy as when in the stern of my skiff; and to-day I will forget—what? Well, that I am tired of this artificial life and all its tinseled unreality. Yes; to-day, despite the coming matrimonial problem at Barminster, I forget the barpings of my poor savage Haidee, I will be happy."

Alas! little did he think that the day shining so brightly and invitingly upon him would prove the momentous one of his life.

In an hour the cob, all fire and impatience, was waiting at the door, and, leaving word with the faithful Norgate that he should not return till evening, Adrien leaped lightly into the saddle and started for the pretty village of Hampton. The cob stepped out through the London streets, and, when he had got clear of town, put on the pace with such a delight in his forces that he bore his handsome master to the precincts of the Cardinal Wolsey palace half an hour before Lady Eveline would expect him.

So he turned, round and rode back to the next village, lower down the river, where his skiff was kept, and rowed up to Hampton, where, by the steps that led to the court, Lady Eveline, exquisitely dressed in a pale-blue costume of some mysterious, gauzy substance that suited her delicate style of beauty admirably, was waiting for him. She greeted him with a happy smile, and pressed his white but strong hand as he assisted her into the boat.

"And how is Aunt Rose?" he said with a slight smile.

"Oh, very well," said Lady Eveline, returning the smile. "I told her that I should visit some friends a little farther on, and perhaps stop to dine—so—so—well, after a struggle I got away, and here we are. Is it not beautiful? And I am so happy! How good of you to come!"

Adrien replied in kind, and then, sitting down to the sculls, pulled away with the long, swinging stroke which had gone so far towards helping the crew of his college to win so many well-fought contests.

It was a remarkable fact about Adrien Leroy that, although confessedly the most indolent man in the always-indolent fashionable world, he could, when he chose to exert himself, outdo most men in all manly exercises—rowing, walking, skating; at all he was a proficient, and excelled in that quiet, careless way which made nothing of feats that others would have trumpeted from east to west. So they started, and gloried in the sunshine, the glitter of the water, and the mock love which each so admirably pretended to feel for the other.

A few hours after Adrien had started, Mr. Jasper ascended the stairs to his chambers, and was informed by Norgate that his master was out for the day.

"Oh," said Mr. Jasper quietly, inwardly irritated that his dupe should be absent for a day without telling him his intention and his whereabouts. "Oh, where has he gone? He mentioned it last night, but I have forgotten," he said, as if trying to remember.

"I don't know, sir," replied Norgate. "Mr. Adrien did not leave word."

"Ah, very well," said Jasper indifferently. "I'll just go up and write a letter, Norgate, I think," and he passed into the room, Norgate closing the door after him and running down the stairs.

Mr. Jasper waited until his retreating footsteps had died away, then, with a quick hand and a keen eye, turned over the letters which lay where Adrien had carelessly thrown them, on a small inlaid table.

"Hem!" mused Mr. Vermont. "Not there. I should know her handwriting in a moment. I know he has gone with her, for I saw the brougham pass. She must have let him know this morning, and by letter. Can he have got it with him?"

Muttering thus, his eye caught a scrap of torn paper clinging to the steel bars of the grate. In a moment his fat hand had snatched it, and his small eyes devoured it.

"Ah," he muttered with a smile. "Lit his cigar with it. Burned it all save one corner, which is the most important part. Let me see—Lady Rose has apartments at Hampton Court Palace. They have gone there; and now, shall I follow them? Why should I? And yet, as the time draws near for the grand coup, I will not lose him from my sight. I am uneasy if he is not within my reach. Yes; I will go on his track. I want a holiday; the knave wants a holiday sometimes as badly as the idiot," and, with a smooth laugh, he pocketed the scrap of paper and left the room.

By noon Mr. Jasper was at Hampton, strolling along the river-side and smoking a cigar. Very amiable he looked, and quite interested in the boats, and, therefore, the man who let them out on hire very readily answered his questions as to the customers, the best season of the year, etc., all of which tended to the important one—had a boat with a lady and gentleman gone out that day?

"No," the boatman said. "No boat had gone out that day with a lady and gentleman."

"Oh," said Mr. Jasper, "I thought I saw a gentleman rowing a lady down the river—rowing very well, too."

"Ah," said the man, "I know who you mean; a gentleman, regular swell, in a light skiff, lady in blue. They've gone up stream."

This was what Mr. Jasper needed, and, after a few minutes, more of strolling about among the boats, he started off along the bank, keeping at such a distance from the stream that, though he could see all who passed in boats, no one on the river could see him.

The beauty of the day, the shimmer of the silver river, the caroling of the birds, had no softening effect upon him. His gray, bird-like little eyes noted nothing but the boats that passed, none of which as yet—though the afternoon was falling fast—contained Adrien and Lady Eveline.

Yet he knew that he had not missed them, for he had taken his luncheon in the balcony of an inn overlooking the river, which he had not lost sight of since he had left Hampton.

Walking thus, he had reached the small village of Weybridge. Very small it was, consisting only of an inn, a small house—half-cottage, half-and-half shop—and a few cottages where the bargemen lived when they were at home, which was exceedingly seldom. In that little shop-parlor, as Mr. Jasper approached the village, sat a little woman and her husband at their five-o'clock tea.

"John Ashford, Grocer," was the legend over the shop-door, and these were John Ashford and his "good little wife," as he called her, Lucy Ashford.

They had two children, who were playing by the side of the river, and were doing very comfortably, as their neighbors the bargemen's wives expressed it. The man's face was a good-humored, honest, every-day one. His wife's was not so ordinary, for in her eyes and along the corners of her rather weak-looking mouth was a shadow of fear and timidity. Even now, as she sat, pouring out her husband's tea, the slight restlessness of her unoccupied hand upon the table discovered the peculiar trait in her character, and at times it was more marked still by a start at some sudden noise or a cry of alarm if a customer chanced to knock the counter more loudly than usual. She could see her two little ones from the window of the room, and once or twice she smiled gently as they turned, in their playing with a girl who sat beside them, to make gestures of affection to their little mother.

"Well," said John, "how's the girl getting on, Lucy? Got the better of that shyness, aint she?"

"Yes," said his wife with a sigh. "Poor girl! I think she must have suffered a great deal for one so young. Suffered for no fault of her own, either," she added quickly, "for she's as innocent as little Annie herself. Poor thing!"

"Poor thing!" echoed John Ashford, turning to look at the group of three, and then falling-to at his bread and butter again. "Let me see, she's been here three days, hasn't she? Rum thing, my finding her so, isn't it? If I hadn't come across the moor that evening from Walton, I shouldn't-a-seen the poor thing lying in the shade of the furze. Wouldn't give no account of herself," he continued, going over mediatively the circumstances of his discovery of the girl, who was playing with the children outside. "Said her name was 'Ria; that's for Maria, I suppose?"

"Yes," said Lucy; "I've called her Maria, as seeming more kindly like."

"And she hasn't said anything more than that she tramped from London because she couldn't bear the crowds?"

"No," said his wife, "nothing more; and I haven't asked her, John. We don't want to know what sorrow it was that drove her from her friends. It's enough for us that she is little better than a child, penniless and homeless. If she's got a secret, let her keep it, John dear. We all have a little corner in our hearts which we keep closed," she added, almost unconsciously.

"Excepting you and me, my dear," said John, getting up, wiping his mouth, and kissing her.

She started and paled a little.

"Yes, of course," she said; "excepting you and me, dear."

"We've no secrets," said the good-natured grocer. "Our hearts are open as skeleton clocks—all the works to be seen for nothing, eh, Lucy, my dear?" and, laughing at his own apt simile, he kissed her again.

"And now," he said, "if you'll take care of the shop, I'll just go over and buy those things at Richmond. Old Tucker's cart starts in half an hour, and it's a good twenty minutes to his place."

"Go along, then," said his little wife cheerfully, "and don't forget my new bonnet-ribbon."

"All right," said the husband; and, putting on his hat, he waved a kiss to his children and started on his journey to Richmond, where he intended purchasing some stock for his little shop.

Lucy Ashford looked after him wistfully, then sighed.

"Poor John!" she murmured. "If he knew that I had a secret, and such a one—he who believes me so good and—and—true to him—and so I am true to him, and the past can only be repented for, and I do repent. O John, John! if you knew how I repent that evil hour when my folly and vanity ruined me! But there, I will not think of it. It is quite gone; no one knows of it excepting Mr. Vermont—and him I have not seen for years—and poor father. I am safe from them, for father is Mr. Vermont's faithful servant, in his secrets and confidence, and he would not ruin me and John. Oh, no, no! Let me forget it. I will call the children—Annie, Lucy, Maria!"

When she called, the two children ran towards the window, and the girl who was with them turned her head and followed them.

It was Reah.

Lucy Ashford stooped to kiss the children, then said kindly to the quiet, silent girl:

"You must be tired with them now, my dear. Would you like to come and sit down for a little while?"

Reah raised her dark, beautiful eyes gratefully.

"No, ma'am, thank you; I am not tired. They are so good to me. I love them."

"You would like to go out again, then?" asked Lucy Ashford.

"Yes, if they like," answered Reah, looking at the children and the rare, sad smile just parting her perfectly-formed lips.

"Yes, yes, yes!" cried the children. "Come along, 'Ria!" and, clinging to her skirt, they dragged the dark-eyed girl back to the river-side again.

Lucy Ashford sat at the table whence the tea-things were now removed, and, with some needlework in her hand, tried to forget that blot on her past, the knowledge of which she knew would blight her own, her husband's, and her children's present and future.

Meanwhile Adrien's skiff was moored at the landing-place of an old inn some distance farther up the river. Under an old porch the Lady Eveline was drinking a cup of tea, while he smoked his cigar and looked lazily at the rising moon. They had been talking quietly and gravely for some time. There was a flash of anger, half-melting into scorn, in Lady Eveline's eyes; in his a gravity and earnestness visible through the mask of placid indolence. They had been talking, and he, with a fearlessness which did not characterize all his dealings with the fair sex, had been breaking a stern resolution to his companion. She broke the silence presently.

"And so you have determined, Adrien? You will marry Lady Constance and—and—leave me?"

He nodded.

"You know I must," he said. "I must marry, and soon. You are angry because I tell you, Eveline; you would be angry if I played you false, deceived you, sprung my marriage on you after it had occurred!"

"Yes," she said in a low voice. "And this is the last happy day we shall spend together?"

"Yes," he said with a half-sigh. "And I believe, standing here in the calm moonlight, that we ought never to have spent any at all. But I do not moralize. I am no worse than other men of my set; we are caught in the whirlpool, and cannot but fall in its eddies. But to-night is the last, Eveline. Do not smile when I tell you that I am going to change the tenor of my life. The Baron has raised his voice, and sternly announced my duty as head of our race. You, who love high blood and all its responsibility, would not tempt me to disregard his voice. We have been playing at love, Lady Eveline—no harm but in the seeming, as Heaven bears witness! but, pleasant pastime as it is, it must end. But let us spend the last evening more pleasantly than debating on these minor moralities of our life. Come, the moon is up; we must be going down stream."

Lady Eveline, who knew him too well to hope that the eloquence of a Cicero or all the tears of a Niobe would move him when he had made a resolve, wisely acquiesced in his renunciation, and the two got into the boat. Adrien, who felt as a man does who has taken a step on the road of duty, pulled leisurely with the stream. The moon grew brighter, the night more delicious, with every five minutes. A profound silence reigned around, broken only by the occasional cry of a night-bird.

Presently Lady Eveline peered forward.

"The moonlight is so deceiving," she said in a low voice. "I nearly steered you into the bank."

"Can you see?" he said. "Put down the lines, and I will guide the boat while I row, if you cannot."

"No," she said; "I can see well enough."

"All right," he said. "I am going to row quicker. It's time we were at Hampton. What time did you order the brougham for?"

"Nine," she replied, with a sigh.

And his long strokes grew more rapid. The boat flew along, breaking up the placid water into silver beneath each plunge. Lady Eveline leaned forward, steering silently. Suddenly she started up with a cry of alarm.

"Look, look!" she cried, "what is that?" and pointed to a sheet of spray rising and falling a few yards from them, or rather below them.

Adrien turned his head, rowing still, thinking it was an owl, but the next moment reversed the sculls and cried sternly:

"Sit down; you have steered us over the weir!"

There was scarcely a moment's space between his words and the darting of the boat to the sleek, shining sluice. He tried to stem the tide, but vainly.

"Cling to the boat!" he shouted loudly; for the falling of the water rang and hummed round them; then, as the boat capsized and plunged into the foam beneath, he made a grasp at her dress, missed it, and, from where he was swimming amidst the foam, saw her lightly-clad form dashing away down the stream.

He turned his stony, stern face up to the moon with a silent prayer that the punishment of their mutual folly might not fall on the weak woman alone, then struck out after her. He was an expert swimmer, and, aided by the stream, which was as swift as a mill-race, he soon overtook her. Her face was turned upwards, her eyes were closed.

"Heaven grant me her life!" he groaned, and, clutching her hair, he swam slantwise towards the bank.

A few seconds and he had reached it, panting like a race-horse, and nearly exhausted. Then he laid her down, and felt for some signs of life in her hands and lips. She still breathed, and, with a hoarse groan of gratitude, he looked round for assistance. At a little distance a light burned in a window. Without pausing an instant, he took the still form in his arms and hastened towards it.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY VANDYKE BROWN.

The Night Before.

Fill the goblets to the brim,
Here's a song for rare old sherry;
Drink until your senses swim,
Drink, for drinking makes us merry.
Speed the golden hours away—
Let us live while live we may!

Sing the praises of old wine;
Nothing earthly can be finer—
Woman's love may seem divine,
The good sherry is diviner.
Drink confusion to all sorrow,
Drink oblivion to the morrow!

The Morning After.

Wrap this towel round my head—
Wonder why my mouth tastes fishy!
Lord, I wish that I was dead!
Order up a quart of Vichy;
Can't they make that racket louder!
What is this—a Seidlitz-powder!

Seems as though my head would burst—
Peasant this is—o-o-p—very!
What a fearful, burning thirst!
No more songs for me on sherry;
No, I'll do the thing I oughter—
Sign the pledge and stick to water!

DRAMATIC PORTRAITS.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Not very long ago, in two consecutive issues of THE GALAXY, I read two very admirable articles by Mr. Frederick Whittaker on "The Dramatic Canons." They offered considerable suggestion for thought and discussion. His very clever exposition of the laws governing successful dramatic construction is, in the main, correct. But more can be said, although it is, perhaps, true that a mixed audience requires, more or less, the sustaining interest of an intense passion analyzed or dissected, or a succession of climaxes in incident, yet the beauties of portraiture in the drama should not be ignored.

Take, for instance, from his own enumeration of the lasting successes of Boucicault. It seems to me that "The Shaughraun" lives, while hundreds of other Irish dramas by Falconer, Boucicault himself, and others have only had an ephemeral existence, because the tattered Con stands as a fine portrait of pitiable (and humorous as well) humanity.

And the same can be said in a greater degree of Jefferson's Rip Van Winkle. Where is the interest of story or climax of incident there? The whole interest is concentrated in the generous good-nature of the drunken Rip in the first act, and the pathetic awakening of the returned Rip in the last act, through which runs a grain of Irving's fine humor. All the rest is the merest accessory.

In "Kerry," an artistic piece of work, in which, as adaptor and actor, Boucicault has excelled himself, the whole interest of the work is in the finely-chiseled portrait of a faithful old servant. In the original free translation of the French drama, "La Joie fait Peur," entitled "Sunshine Through the Clouds," this servant is an almost unimportant character. And the interest of the play consists in the study of the intensity of the maternal passion. Boucicault's story and analysis of emotion are not so good as in the original. But his portrait of Kerry is fine, and will make his adaptation live where the first play dies.

Take, again, the secret of the triumphs of the late successful dramatist Robertson, and it lies wholly in portraiture. "Caste" is not exciting, intense, or more interesting than a thousand-and-one ordinary love stories. But its wonderfully well-drawn characters, added to its charmingly natural dialogue, will make it exist as a type of the drama through all time. Every character stands out as clearly limned as the figures in old paintings of Flemish and Venetian interiors; Old Eccles as a typical old inebriate, Sam Gerridge as a typical British mechanic, George D'Alroy as the ordinary healthy young Englishman, Hawtree as the languid London swell, the Marquise as the haughty aristocrat, Esther as the devoted wife and mother, Polly as the coquettish damsel—all as clearly-defined types of modern English life as if they stepped down out of picture-frames.

I always dwell with particular pleasure on this play, because it is a magnificent success without the claptrap of scenery (only two scenes in three acts being used) and sensation. All of Robertson's plays have the same characteristics, but in a less marked and perfect degree.

But take even that theatrical production "The Gilded Age." What does the play amount to? It is a mere hodge-podge of almost uninteresting incidents, without relevancy or coherency. But the character of Col. Sellers is the portrait of a type, and in Raymond's hands has been molded into a fine piece of art.

"Our American Cousin," as originally written by Tom Taylor, is a capital play; interesting in story, charming in dialogue, strong in situations—each act ending with a suspensory climax—and with a good character in Asa Trenchard, to which the others are more or less subordinate. In the more modern version, as presented by Mr. Sothern, we have rather a vapid play, because most of the characters have been subordinated to that stupendous monument of sublime idiotcy—Dundreary. But the portraiture of that phase of character is so inimitable that we forgive Mr. Sothern for the liberties he has taken with the original play.

We could multiply instances without number upon this point. One of the latest and most successful is the play of "The Danicheffs." Is the passion not suppressed all through? What are the simple, bare details of the story?

Just this: That Vladimir, the only son of the Countess Danicheff, is in love with Anna, an educated serf—handmaiden of his mother's household—and wishes to marry her. That his mother promises him if, after a year of life in the fashionable world, he still prefers Anna, he shall have her. Immediately after his departure, the Countess marries Anna to Ossip, a favorite serf, freeing both. The argument of the play then follows in the constancy of Vladimir, the unchangeable love of Anna, the self-denial and self sacrifice of Ossip, the final defeat of the Countess, and reunion of the original lovers.

A very simple story, and very simply told. A little extraneous matter is woven in, but it is almost wholly irrelevant, and affects but little the main thread of the narrative. If the passion is intense, it is most quiet in its intensity. There is nothing magnetic or "catching" about it, like "The Two Orphans," which is a play relying almost wholly on its rapid diorama of romantic incident, its robustious sentiment, its terribly wrought-up and wonderfully well-sustained climaxes. There everything depends on the magnificent combination of these things, and it succeeds—as it should, for it is admirably done. You remember, it is true, the figures of Mother Frochard and the two opposite types of mankind, her sons. But they are rough-hewn. Drawn with a strong hand, truly, but the hand held but charcoal while drawing them. And they are subsidiary to the general action. As the "strolling player" would remark, "the piece plays itself."

Now look for a moment at the central figures in "The Danicheffs!" Doesn't the strength, the life, the verve, as the French would say, exist almost exclusively in those three portraits? First at the central figure—the Countess Danicheff—round which the rest revolve! It is one of the finest cases of portrait-drawing in modern play-writing—a magnificent piece of distemper-painting. We have no Shakespeares now to chisel out portraits of each character in every play. But the figures of the Countess Danicheff, Vladimir, and Ossip are grand, historical and live portraits—people who belong to humanity, and especially that part of it which has existed in Russia—three figures thrown in bright particular prominence upon the canvas, with a finely pointed pencil, wielded by an unusually fine hand. I thank their creator for them, and am not disposed to quarrel with him that the rest of the characters in the play are not so good. It is more than well done to have done this so well.

Another late success: "Rose Michel." It is true, the principal feature of the play, and the one to which it largely owes its success, is the dissection and analysis of the conflicting principles of maternity and justice in the breast of the titular character. Yet, somehow, in spite of yourself—if well played—lingers in your memory the detestable, it is true, yet well-drawn face and form of the miser, Pierre Michel. The best thing of the kind on the stage since Fagin.

Why do star-actors, so-called, multiply so fast and so successfully, if there is not a great deal in this dramatic portrait-painting? We can hardly keep track of them, they come upon us so fast. Janauschek as Lady Dedlock and Hortense; Florence as Senator Dilworthy—I beg Mr. Wolfe's pardon for impugning his originality—I mean Senator Bardwell Slote; Sothern as Dundreary; Raymond as Sellers; Mary Cary as Poor Jo; and so on and so forth.

I think as a rule that the plays that belong to the analytical and introspective school, and depend on those qualities for their effect, are mainly drawn from a French source. The peculiarity of the modern French drama is in the dissecting and study of some passion often abnormally developed, and so treated. And it has been the most popular and successful class of dramas in our own country the past few years. But even in those plays the dramatist has often builded better than he knew, and created a great character that retains a place in your memory when the plot and passion are forgotten.

Admitting that these successful modern dramas of the French school, and possibly even some of Shakespeare's, are mainly due to the possession of these aforesaid qualities of introspective analysis of passion and variety of incident, yet portraiture of character is a very strong element—is, after all, the cause of long life in a play. I cannot but think that it is the portraits of Sir Peter and Lady Teazle, of Charles and Joseph Surface, to which may be superadded the witty dialogue, that preserves "The School for Scandal," rather than any intense interest of story, intricacy of plot, or variety of scene.

This much on as important a point as any in the creed of the literary dramatist.

WILL F. SAGE.

A FIJIAN TRAGEDY.

The following sad story is correct in its details. It occurred within the writer's ken, and may serve to illustrate how English civilization and laws affect the Fijian mind and mode of thought. About four years ago Ravuso Ioni was the principal chief of Waia, one of a group of islands the most westerly in Fiji, called the Yasawas. About that time the parvenu Fijian Government had just been formed, and we planters and natives were to be blessed with a travesty of English laws and institutions down in the Yasawas. One of our planters was made a warden, a court-house was established, and a posse of native police sent down. It need hardly be said that these proceedings were a mystery to the natives; and even those to Levuka, the more enlightened of them could at first hardly be brought to understand the idea of any government. At all events, Ravuso troubled himself very little about the new sala-ni-ta, as the Government was called by the natives, but carried on in the old Fijian style of his fathers. Now, there was a young man in Waia who made love to all the young girls; and not content with that, he also paid his attentions to the married women. The Fijians are a jealous lot; and by-and-bye a mob of angry husbands complained of this young fellow to their chief, Ravuso, who, with the advice of the old men in full council, decided that this gay lover was to be buturaka-ed—or turkey-tramped, as we whites call it. This buturaka-ing is an institution peculiar to Fiji. The unfortunate is knocked down, and the natives dance and jump on him until he is insensible and nearly dead. A man seldom recovers thoroughly from a good, or rather a bad, buturaka-ing.

Some, doubtless, of the jealous husbands or their friends were among the party that buturaed the gay deceiver, because they carried out their orders so well that in three weeks after the young fellow died from the effects.

In the old times, most of us whites and natives would have said: "Serve him right," and the matter would have ended. But now there was law in the land. Our warden was just appointed, and, new-broomish-like, ordered the arrest of Ravuso. After some trouble he was coaxed to surrender, and was confined at Somo-Somo, awaiting trial. Nothing so puzzles a Fijian as the slow procedure of English law, and poor Ravuso pined in prison. So one day he asked his Roa (jailer) to be allowed a walk. They accompanied him, and all sat down under a large ivi tree. After a time the chief proposed to get some ivis, and climbed the tree for the purpose. When he got to the top, he called out to his astonished guards that he was going to throw himself down headlong. "Tell your white judge," said he, "that I am a chief and the son of a chief; that I can't survive the disgrace of being imprisoned like a felon; that the punishment given to the man of mine was just—he was a bad man; that I am a chief, and had a right to punish him waka-vil" (after the manner of Fiji-hanging, he threw himself down, broke his back, and died shortly afterwards.

In a day or two the news of the chief's death reached Waia, and a wail went up from each little village embowered in its cocoanut grove for the death of their "Turaga," as they call their chiefs. His wife, Lau Wai (to strike water, as in fishing) and young daughter (fifteen years only) made up their minds that their chief should not go unaccompanied to Hades, but have someone to cook and look after him there. So one night they tied a rope between two trees, twisted it round their necks, and so strangled themselves, after the old Fijian fashion. These people had been Christians ten years, but evidently believed in their old traditions still. Our warden was not a bad fellow, and I believe the unfortunate result of his first attempt at enforcing English law among the natives caused him many a pang.

And now the sad tale of the death of this unfortunate Waia chief and his family is told in many a Fijian hamlet in the cool evenings, as the sun goes down under the shade of the lofty ivis and cocoanut trees; and the women and children hear with a thrill of the power of that mysterious nata-ni-tu whose action hurled a Fijian chief from his high estate, and sent him and his devoted wife and daughter prematurely before the face of their Maker.

"What do we have the Fourth of July for?" asked a boy of his ma.

"Fourth of July? Why, Freddy, I'm ashamed of you. We have Fourth of July to celebrate the —husband, I declare I can't think for the moment what it is."

"Why, don't you know why we celebrate the Fourth? Who was it discovered America?"

"Christopher Columbus!" exclaimed the mother and boy simultaneously.

"Right; and when did he discover it?"

"Why, on the Fourth of July, of course," replied the mother; "but I've got the worst memory about these historical facts."

"That's it," said the wise father encouragingly. "Columbus discovered America on the Fourth of July, and the nation celebrates the day in honor of the event. Freddy, I want you to study up. I should feel awfully mortified had you asked me such a question before company."

A TOWN OF DWARFS.—A writer in The London Times describes the effects of excessive intermarriage on the inhabitants of Brotes, a little town in the province of Santander, Spain. Until eighteen or nineteen years ago, the village was quite shut off from the rest of the world. Its inhabitants, from their ever-recurring intermarriages, had become quite a race of dwarfs. On market day the priests might be seen, with long black coats and high black hats, riding in to purchase the simple provision for the week's consumption—men of little intelligence and no

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CHAS. K. HOWARD.—Heenan and Sayers fought at Farnborough, Eng., April 17, 1860. The ring was broken in and the referee ran away in the end of the thirty-seventh round, when Heenan had Tom in a dangerous position on the ropes. Fivegrounds of a somewhat scrambling character were afterwards fought, when the crowd overran the ring and Sayers was taken out. Heenan following, after calling in vain for Sayers to come back and finish. Heenan knocked Sayers down twenty-five times, threw him thirteen times; Sayers slipped down twice, and they fell together twice. Sayers' right arm was seriously injured, but not broken, by receiving the weight of Heenan's blows, and the latter was almost completely blinded, though still strong and full of fight, while Tom was very weak and badly used up. The American champion was anxious to renew the battle at an early date; but Sayers' friends were opposed to it, and a draw was finally consented to by Heenan, Sayers resigning the championship and retiring.

REMEMBER.—The Cambria beat the Dauntless fairly in the race from the Irish coast to Sandy Hook, and nothing to the contrary was ever charged. The Cambria subsequently contended against the New York Club schooners in the first race in America's waters for the Royal Yacht Squadron Cup (won by the America in 1851), and was beaten, the Magic being the winner. You are evidently thinking of the Livonia, which was after and brought to this country by Capt. Ashbury, owner of the Cambria, and engaged in a series of races for the cup above mentioned, sailing on different days against single yachts of the N. Y. C. Hisobject in regard to one of the races gave great offense to the American yachtsmen.

CHARLES R. READ, Boston Highlands.—1. Twenty-five miles have been walked in nearly an hour less time than you say you did it in. 2. It is an exceedingly difficult matter nowadays to induce anybody to risk anything in the way you mention; and our advice is that you abandon the idea of appearing in public in that line of business. There are too many at it already, and it doesn't pay. 2. See THE CLIPPER ALMANAC for time-records. 4. Read "Practical Training," obtainable from Ed. James, whose address is in advertisement.

H. C. M., Corinth.—2. If a batsman has had two strikes called on him, and has struck at neither of them, and a third ball is sent in, and he strikes at and misses it, and the catcher catches it on the first bounce, is he out, or does the umpire call it a fair ball and give him another chance?" No, not comprehend your meaning. 2. The batsman is out. A "good ball" is not called unless he fails to strike at it.

CROSS ROADS, Red Sulphur Springs.—The age does not pass as drawn poker, unless otherwise agreed upon. Of late years the practice has been introduced at the West of transferring the "age" to (in this case) C, the original soldier (B having passed out). It is not, however, a general practice at the West, and is not practiced at all at the East.

W. W. SEYMOUR, Troy.—1. William Fuller was born in Norfolk, Eng., and his weight in condition was 168lb. He defeated Jay, was beaten by him and Molineaux, and fought a draw with the latter—all in England. He resided for many years in Brooklyn, L. I., and amassed considerable money, partly by giving instruction in the art of self-defense, and he died there, respected by all.

GOTHAM.—Having a five in his hand, A could add his deuce to 5's three, and, placing the two thus formed upon his (A's) partner's combination, could call the pile "fives." But if A had a ten in his hand, he could not add his deuce to 5's three and his own partner's five and call the pile ten. That would be building from the board. But duplicating a pile already formed is not building.

K. G.—There are both Catholic and Protestant. As you seem to prefer the Catholic, it is almost necessary to call upon any priest in this city, and he will cheerfully advise you—and more fully than we can do in these columns. Or you could go direct to the asylum, Sixty-eighth street and Lexington avenue. Either way, it is a matter of strictest confidence.

MORT. C., Warsaw.—It should be "the Misses Brill," if the parties in question are two or more. A construction of "The Miss Brills" might be taken to mean one lady named Brills. It could not be so interpreted in this particular case, because "daughters of Peter Brill" follows; but there is no reason that the rule should be departed from.

OBSIDE.—1. Capt. A. H. Bogardus is the champion wingshot. 2. He may have done so, but not in any case where official record will affect his claim to the title of champion. 3. We cannot pick out that number, and say they are the best in the country. 4. You can obtain such a work from Ed. James. 5. We have no record that says so.

J. G.—It makes no difference whether it is written 6, 8, 77, or 8, 6, 77, or '77, 8, 6. It is a riddle any way, and only those use it who are familiar with the key. The more common way of rendering Aug. 6, 1877, mathematically is to write it 6. 8. '77—meaning 6th day of the 8th month of the 1877th year of the Christian era.

G. B. HENRICKS.—Bill Poole was shot between 12 and 1 o'clock A. M. Feb. 25, 1855, and died March 8 following. The ball was found imbedded in the muscular tissue of the heart. 2. Sayers' arm was not broken in his fight with Heenan, but it was badly injured.

B., Guelph.—C and D could have made A play the ten, instead of the eight; or, failing to do that, they could have called on him, after the last card was laid down the ten, to lead the ten. These were their sole remedies, and they neglected to avail themselves of either.

A READER, Boston.—The bet, as stated, cannot be decided one way or the other. First, county or State must be specified, as the law is not the same in all localities; and next, it must be specified whether the man has made a will or has died intestate.

SUBSCRIBER, Guelph.—1. B cannot play alone after his partner has assisted him. 2. In a partner-game, B can call any card in your hand that you may have exposed, and can make you play it at any time that said playing will not cause you to revoke.

EDENBURG.—1. Usually at cassino the cards are dealt four at a time. The better way is to deal them one at a time. 2. B having so played as to intimate that he was about to take in the fours, he could have been required to take them in.

S. AND S., Philadelphia.—Either volunteer to play for some person's benefit, or see the manager of some variety theatre. Show him what you can do, and solicit an engagement or an opportunity to appear in a benefit.

W. D. W., Hannibal.—Consult some paper-hanger or dealer in paper-hangings. The prices fluctuate so much that it would be impossible to give a correct idea of the cost.

CONSTANT READER, Astoria.—At the draw game of dominoes, a player can draw whenever and as long as he pleases, although he may have pieces in his hand that will match either end or both.

W. H. M., Toledo.—No answers by mail. The property of Howes & Cushing's Circus has been attached by Mr. Lorillard of this city, in a suit to recover money for the transportation of that show to South America and back.

G. B., Rochester.—Hope Chapel, No. 720 Broadway, in this city, was opened as the Academy of Minstrels, under the management of Frank Hussey and J. Taylor, Aug. 20, 1866.

JEFFERSONVILLE.—1. No star plays to crowded houses in every city he or she may visit. 2. She is by no means the best American actress. She is a clever novice, who gives great promise for the future. 3. Good enough.

HUNKY, Springfield.—1. At forty-five the ace of hearts calls for nothing but a trump. 2. The dealer should discard, when he has turned up the ace, before a card has been looked at.

R. J. E., Rochester.—The Rochester Club has defeated Auburn twice, by 10 to 3 and 6 to 4; and Auburn has whipped Rochester four times, by 7 to 0, 6 to 5, 14 to 2, and 9 to 6.

OLD SPORT, Paterson.—1. Three deuces or three sixes will beat three aces at poker dice. 2. The highest euchre card should be left in the kitty, and that is jack. 3. It will depend upon who is to decide it.

D. S., Springfield.—Ordinarily, such a bet would hold good. The bet is made upon the supposition that there are individual players, unless they are specified in the terms of the wager.

FRANK KILBY, Phila.—We require a deposit with all challenges, whether the challenger's reputation is good or not. If a man can obtain money to make a match, he can get money to put up a deposit with his challenge.

R. J. AND R. H.—If any one mentioned the words "till the game was out" was inserted in the bargain, then A was out when he made 4. Otherwise, he must make 10 to count the 4.

H. H. JAMES, Galveston.—John C. Heenan was born May 2, 1834, stood 6 feet 1½ inches in height, and when he fought Sayers he weighed 178lb. He died Oct. 25, 1873.

C. O. D., Fitchburg, Mass.—In the third Mr. Amend ed to be conveyed was that Joe was the more stylish boxer of the two.

SUBSCRIBER.—We cannot undertake to decide bets as to the rival claims of St. Louis and Chicago as to present population.

CELTICS T., Memphis.—Neither party is out. The first out should have called out as soon as sufficient points had been made to put him out.

NON-SECTARIAN.—We believe there is some such clause in the Constitution of that State. Most assuredly, if there is such a clause, it is not enforced.

E. M. D., Newburg.—Your chances of entering the U. S. Navy just now are so exceedingly slim that it would be a waste of space to describe the conditions.

SUBSCRIBER.—Unless the game was drawn by mutual consent, A wins. Five innings constitute a valid game, when more cannot be played.

R. F. S., Cincinnati.—Mr. B. Woolf is the author of "The Mighty Dollar." There is no book about it, as it is an original play.

FORT, Council Bluffs.—Get some music dealer in your town to order it from Louis P. Goulland, 36 Tremont street, Boston, Mass.

DECLINED.—Mr. Delirium Tremens," "German Rifle Girl," "Musings," "Pretty Rose Bay," "There's Millions In It."

A. E. D., Greenburg, Pa.—The reverend gentleman did not use language unbecoming to him, and we omit the verses, which are just a trifle lame in construction.

W. H. B., Boston.—1. We think he is living; and it so, a letter addressed to him in care of this office should reach him. 2. It is examined.

SUBSCRIBER, Cedar Rapids.—Cannot say. If they start out next season, you will find their whereabouts in our minstrel summary.

OTTAWA, Canada.—1. Yes; he can change his pitcher for that reason. 2. The error is charged to the baseman, and an assistance is credited to the catcher. 3. No error.

LAWRENCEBURGH, Indiana.—We would prefer the second team, because the pitcher and catcher are familiar with each other, and the support is better.

COVEY, Reader, Astoria.—Rushes to—only two out, unless the man on first was also touched, in which case a triple play was made.

B. J. F., Pine Bush.—A batsman can go to the bat as many times in one inning as his turn at the bat comes round before the third hand has been put out.

J. G., Carlisle.—Unless there was a special agreement to the contrary time to get the train, the nine refusing to play forfeits the game.

B. F. K., Dayton.—Jenny Lind is residing in London, Eng., or immediate vicinity. We cannot give you her precise address.

O., Troy.—Each is reported to have offered to row the other for money—Riley last Fall, and Courtney after the fiasco at Greenwood Lake, July 14.

D. W. WILLIAMS, Hillsboro.—We are not aware that he is dead. When last heard from, a few months ago, he was alive and well in St. Louis, Mo.

R. O. PAUL, Augusta.—We are not in need of a "regular" there, but such fresh and interesting items as you may be obliged to furnish will be thankfully received.

CONEY ISLAND.—From a man named Coney, probably. Call at Van Sickler's when next you visit it, and he can give you the whole history.

A SUBSCRIBER, Cincinnati.—John C. Heenan died Oct. 25, 1873.

M. A. S., Cheyenne.—We do not need anything in that line at present.

A. S. T.—There is nothing except pulling it out by the roots.

FOURTH AND MAIN, Covington.—High, low, jack, game, don, pedro.

S. W. H., Newark.—You were wrong. You cannot raise your own bet.

GEO. A., JR.—Goldsmith Maid's record has been 2:14 for several years.

T. W. B.—A must make 10 before he can count the 4 he needs, unless otherwise provided for.

P. J., Providence.—He counts three when the last card makes fifteen.

CARNARVONSHIRE.—We cannot say when that bridge was built.

HARRY, Washington.—We do not give commercial opinions.

EVANSVILLE.—Know nothing of them further than that they advertised.

H. M., Laporte.—1. See answer to "Harry, Washington." 2. Write to the American News Co., this city.

BRITTON.—Any letter addressed to the first named can be addressed in care of this office. 2. Pauline Markham is in England.

W. GRIFFITHS, Philadelphia.—Thank you; they are very acceptable, and will be used at an early day.

T. K. LA V., Toronto.—It has already appeared in our columns, if our memory is not at fault.

E. S. H., Muskegon.—No answers by mail. Letters mailed in care of this office will reach them.

M. DE L., Chicago.—A letter addressed to either of them in care of this office will reach the person intended.

SUBSCRIBER, Fairfield.—1. G. Lorillard, American Jockey Club, Madison avenue, New York.

S. S., Akron.—We have no space wherein to print rules. If you have a dispute, state its nature.

A. F., Brooklyn.—Failure to forward within reach is not an error, nor is it a base-hit which forces a player out.

MURRAY, Phœnix.—A player at cassino can build on his partner, and he cannot. State the case.

L. L. C., Chicago.—The cards falling 6, 3, 4, 2, 3, 4, 5, 1, the player of the ace, which is the last card, counts seven.

MORTIMER, North Weare.—1. Bond played with the Brooklyn Athletics. 2. Not out. 3. Cannot say.

BASEMAN, Troy.—It was the pitcher's error in not throwing straight to the base-player.

J. P. N., Abingdon.—The striker is entitled to all he can get.

S. P., Hartford.—We know of no "Life of Dan Marble" which can now be purchased.

J. A. F., Laramie City.—We have no record of the date of her birth.

GROUND RENT.—6, 6, 7, 8, and 8 count four by fifteens and twelve by sequences.

C. C., Chicago.—Gold-smith Maid has the fastest three heats, made at Buffalo Aug. 3, 1876.

D. LEARY, Chetopa.—He is proprietor of a place at Fort Hamilton, L. I.

CRIBBAGE.—It cannot so assist his partner unless he (C) has a five spot in his hand.

SPORT, Charleston.—THE CLIPPER ALMANAC will enlighten you upon that point.

CHAS. CRITTON, Buffalo.—We will endeavor to obtain the desired information, and answer next week.

SELAH, St. Louis.—Since you have made a special rule, that settles it. Otherwise, 2 would count for game.

CUPID, Chicago.—We never knew that he had any other name than William Emerson.

W. P. C., Baltimore.—You should have declined the fruit.

E. K. R.—Sophie is now in New Orleans, La., Irene and Jennie in Cincinnati, O.

H., Williamsburg.—Ask any lawyer to look in the Revised Statutes for the date of the act.

AUCTION PITCH.—No. 1, who played low, loses the game.

T. F. EISENHAUER, Frederick.—See answer to "Sport."

B. W. H., Louisville.—See record in this week's issue.

D. C. BEST.—Will be out about the first week in Sept.

J. W. JR., Cincinnati.—Pursue the plan you propose.

A. L. L., Quincy.—Thanks; but we do not require it.

R. K. M., Troy.—3 to 2 is a better game than 3 to 0.

GOLDEN FLEECE, Phila.—C wins on his high game.

P. M., Jersey City.—Look in a business directory.

W. H. S., Washington.—2:14, by Goldsmith Maid.

L. AND B., Boston.—It is a sweep. B is wrong.

CONSTANT READER.—A can build as described.

J. E. K., Donamara.—The don goes out first.

D. D., Chicago.—It was published last week.

MISSOURIAN.—Sancho counts before pedro.

F. H. P., Hartford.—He is the same person.

NO SIGNATURE.—A was right in calling out.

C. M., Plymouth.—Yes; three times.

A. P., New Orleans.—He is out.

S. B. VILLA.—Cash received.

ANOTHER one of us has been foully dealt with, the victim being the proprietor of The National Republican of Washington, D. C., and the assailant J. R. Wheatley of Kentucky. We were lustily assaulted with a three-ply cowhide, which makes the indignity more humiliating. We are slow to anger, and that is why we permitted the Kentuckian to retire unmolested; but some day somebody will get hurt, and it won't be any of us.

IN THE preliminary skirmish among certain of our city managers, we regret to see a disposition to outflank one another by ways that are dark, if not altogether in vain. Fair competition is the life of business, and therein the drama is strong; but when subterfuge and deceit and questionable devices are resorted to, managers and performers lower themselves in public estimation. Let our friends avoid any "cuthroat game."

THOSE of our daily contemporaries who publish lists of companies engaged at various theatres throughout the dramatic circuit will please not include in such reports the names of persons long since gathered to their fathers; and a little more attention given to the correct placing of the living will not be taken amiss, if it is intended to make the record trustworthy.

THE MANAGERS of the Industrial Exhibition in Pittsburg seem to have forgotten the Philadelphia soldiers, for none have been "respectfully invited to attend."

O'DONNELL, Charles—A prominent citizen of Baltimore, Md., and reputed to be worth several millions of dollars. He was the second and only surviving son of the late Columbus O'Donnell. He was at one time a member of the firm of Newman & O'Donnell, commission-merchants, had the Baltimore agency of the Sun Marine Insurance Company of New York for a time, and was Brazilian Vice-consul at Baltimore for several years up to 1876, the duties devolving upon his private secretary as consular-agent during Mr. O'Donnell's residence abroad. In 1876 the Emperor Dom Pedro appointed him Brazilian Consul at Baltimore. For ten years, as vice-president, he shared the labors of administration of the Canton Company of Baltimore with his father, who was its president. He was also a director of the Union Bank of Maryland, in the Maryland Insurance Company, and in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, resigning the latter on his removal to Paris, where he resided some years, returning to Baltimore last May. He was one of the organizers of the Newburg Oriel Coal Company, of which he remained president. He was also at one time in the first branch of the City Council. He was twice married, his first wife having been Miss De Sodra, a daughter of the then Brazilian Minister to the United States. Some years after her death he married Miss Helen Carroll, a sister of Governor John Lee Carroll. Mr. O'Donnell's grandfather settled in Baltimore in 1780, and was a captain in the East India service, bringing the first cargo from Canton to Baltimore. He gave the name of Canton to the section of Baltimore which he then owned, in honor of his venture. Gen. O'Donnell, father of the deceased, was one of the leading business-men of that city, and accumulated large and left handsomely in the lead. At the furlong-pole Lady Salyers and Cardinal Wolsey came with a rush on each side, and challenged the big bay horse, Cardinal Wolsey winning by a head from Lady Salyers. Time, 1:57¾. Partnership was beaten by a length by Lady Salyers, Oriole fourth, and Dan Kinney last. Mutual pools paid $32.40 on the winner.

The cloudy and threatening appearance of the weather on the third day, Aug. 16, caused a falling-off in the attendance. The first race was for the Grinstead Stakes, for two-year-olds, $50 entrance, half forfeit, with $500 added by the Association; maidens at the time of starting allowed 5lb, and winners of any race over any other course than Saratoga after June 25 to carry 7lb extra. There were five starters out of the thirty subscribers, making the stake worth $1,375. The starters were Geo. Lorillard's b. c. Duke of Magenta, 126lb; P. Lorillard's br. c. Spartan, 105lb, and his b. f. Bertha, 102lb; F. Smythe's b. c. Wade Hampton, 105lb; and J. A. Grinstead's b. c. by Alarm, dam by War Dance, 105lb. Although the Duke of Magenta's bad temper was well known, and he carried the extra penalty, he was made the favorite over the field, bringing $200; P. Lorillard's pair, $85; Grinstead's colt, $55; and Wade Hampton, $25. The start was delayed by the favorite's usual display of bad temper, he doing all he possibly could to get rid of Barbee, his jockey, his example being followed by Spartan. At last Mr. Crouse, who acted as starter, dropped the flag to a fair send-off, Grinstead's colt leading, and followed by Bertha, Duke of Magenta, Wade Hampton and Spartan, the latter getting off badly. The favorite ran into second place down the shute, and as they entered the main track he was at the Alarm colt's quarters. Entering the homestretch, he went to the front, and appeared to have the race in hand, when Evans suddenly brought up Spartan with one of his characteristic rushes, collared the favorite, and made a dead heat of it in the last stride in 1:16¾, the Alarm colt a length behind the dead-heaters. The owners agreed to divide the stakes, which, of course, divided the pools. The second race was a dash of three-quarters of a mile, for ages, for a purse of $600, entrance $20; winners at any meeting except Saratoga to carry 7lb extra; horses beaten, and not having won a race on this course this year, allowed 7lb. The starters were Geo. Lorillard's b. h. Tom Ochiltree, 124lb; Carr & Co.'s b. c. Viceroy, 118lb; L. A.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP RECORD.

The League-pennant Race.

At the present time the Louisville Club has the lead, while the Bostons stand second and the St. Louis third, Brooklyn being fourth and Chicago last. The Cincinnatis are practically out of the race. Without further comment we proceed to give the series of tables, from which a pretty good idea of the situation can be arrived at. First is that showing the games the clubs have thus far played with one another. All the tables are made on the basis of games played up to Aug. 19.

	Boston.	Brooklyn.	Chicago.	Cincinnati.	Louisville.	St. Louis.	Games Won.
Boston		9	7	8	6	9	39
Brooklyn	9		7	7	8	9	40
Chicago	8	8		8	7	10	41
Cincinnati	7	8	7		8	8	38
Louisville	8	8	8	7		8	39
St. Louis	6	6	5	7	7		31
Games lost	40	41	41	36	41	41	240

Next comes the table showing how many games each club has to play with the others:

	Boston.	Brooklyn.	Chicago.	Cincinnati.	Louisville.	St. Louis.	Games to Play.
Boston		3	4	6	3	4	20
Brooklyn	3		5	4	3	4	19
Chicago	4	5		4	3	3	19
Cincinnati	6	4	4		4	5	24
Louisville	3	3	3	4		6	19
St. Louis	4	4	3	5	4		19
Games to play	20	19	19	24	19	19	120

Following are tables showing the games won and lost by each of the six clubs:

	Boston.	Brooklyn.	Chicago.	Cincinnati.	Louisville.	St. Louis.	Games Won.
Boston		6	4	7	5	5	23
Brooklyn	3		4	5	5	3	21
Chicago	5	5		4	6	6	26
Cincinnati	2	4	5		3	4	18
Louisville	4	6	5	5		6	27
St. Louis	4	5	3	3	3		18
Games lost	17	20	22	28	18	19	120

Throwing out the Cincinnati games—The Cincinnati Enquirer of Aug. 18 says the Cincinnati Club is not in the League—the record is as follows:

	Boston.	Brooklyn.	Chicago.	Louisville.	St. Louis.	Games Won.
Boston		7	5	5	2	18
Brooklyn	5		4	7	5	21
Chicago	3	4		6	5	18
Louisville	5	3	2		6	16
St. Louis	6	5	3	2		16
Games lost	19	18	20	12	18	87

The International Pennant.

The fight is getting interesting in this series of contests as far as four of the seven clubs are concerned. The Allegheny nine still lead, but the Tecumseh team are close behind them; and if their recent games with the Maple Leafs are to be counted, they lead. The Rochesters are third on the list, with the Buckeye and Manchester nines a tie for fourth place. The record to Aug. 19 is:

	Allegheny.	Buckeye.	Live Oak.	Manchester.	Maple Leaf.	Rochester.	Tecumseh.	Games Won.
Allegheny		4	2	3	1	1	3	14
Buckeye	1		4	2	1	1	0	9
Live Oak	1	2		1	0	1	0	5
Manchester	1	2	2		1	1	0	7
Maple Leaf	1	2	0	3		1	0	7
Rochester	1	3	3	1	2		1	11
Tecumseh	1	2	1	2	4	2		12
Games lost	5	12	11	12	11	7	4	67

The New York Championship.

From a corrected record of the games played by the Hanchamton Cricketts we are enabled to give a later table of the position of the seven State clubs in the championship arena.

	Won.	Lost.	Per Ct.
Cricket	15	8	.652
Star	13	10	.565
Auburn	11	11	.500
Rochester	7	13	.350
Brooklyn	6	11	.353
Hornell	2	6	.250
Buffalo	1	4	.200

HARTFORD vs. LOUISVILLE.

Each of the leading professional nines every season finds one opposing nine more difficult to defeat than any one of the others. Last season, though the Chicagos easily got away with every club but the St. Louis and won the pennant, that St. Louis nine could be whipped only in a minority of the games they played together. Just so is it this season with the St. Louis nine, they finding the Chicagos the only team they cannot whip from. The Hartfords have issued a bulletin to be their most trouble-some customers, as the record shows:

May 18, Hartford vs. Louisville, at Louisville.....12 2
May 19, Louisville vs. Hartford, at Louisville.....9 5
June 23, Louisville vs. Hartford, at Brooklyn.....5 3
June 25, Hartford vs. Louisville, at Brooklyn (11 innings, protested).....5 4

It will be seen that Hartford has but won games out of nine played, and one other will no doubt be awarded to the Louisvilles, viz., the game of June 25.

On Aug. 20 the two nines met together at Brooklyn, N. Y., in the presence of a fair crowd of spectators, considerable interest being manifested to see how the Louisvilles would play after their Boston defeat of last Friday. The Hartfords had to go to the field without their regular pitcher, Bass of the old Cleveland nine taking his place. The Louisvilles evidently went into the game too anxious as to the result, while the Hartfords engaged upon the contest with all to gain and little to lose. They opened with the lead, and maintained it to the close, winning without difficulty by the following score:

BUCKEYE vs. ALLEGHENY.

Fairly played only was the game between these clubs at Allegheny, Pa., Aug. 14, in which the visiting team were beaten by one run. Galvin pitched during the first four innings, and was so badly punished that it was deemed advisable for him to change off with McKelvy, off whom but three hits were made:

INJURIES TO CATCHERS.—It is really surprising, in view of the serious injuries catchers, facing swift pitching close behind the bat, are subjected to, that the wire-mask—a perfect protection against such injuries—is not in more general use among professional catchers. The idea seems to prevail among a prejudiced few of the fraternity that it is not plucky or manly to wear the mask. It is nonsensical to run the risk of such severe injuries simply because a pack of foolish boys may ridicule you. Look at Clapp of the St. Louis nine, who now lies ill and disabled with a broken cheek-bone, due entirely to the fact of his not wearing a protective mask. We regard the Harvard collegian's invention as one of the best things yet for saving a catcher from dangerous injuries. Those masks, improved by substituting an elastic fastening for the strap, can be had at Peck & Snyder's. See advertisement.

WASHINGTON MARKET BALL-TOSSERS.—On Monday, Aug. 13, a nine made up from the fish, oyster and mutton stands of Washington Market proper, challenged a game with the bookkeepers from the west market, at Bergen Point, N. J., and defeated them after a very interesting game (to themselves) of seven innings, when rain put a stop to further errors. Of the play of the F. O. M.'s, particular notice was taken of James Forsyth of the old Gothams as pitcher, while the acrobatic fielding of Fred Hesse, and also the short-stop play of Stevenger, was worthy of note. On the bookkeepers' side due praise was given to Justin McHenry for his very fine third-base play, while Bennett and O'Brien are credited with fine fielding to the score of the accountants. The game was well umpired by H. W. Knapp.

A CARD FROM WALKER.—Below we present Oscar Walker's version of his difficulty with the St. Paul Red Caps:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 12, 1877.

EDITOR CLIPPER—Dear Sir: Seeing in your last week's issue a communication from St. Paul that refers to me, will you kindly grant me space to make a denial of some of the matters stated therein. When the Memphis Reds disbanded I went to St. Paul in answer to a telegram from the Red Caps' management, but never signed any contract with them. When the Manchesters came, I found I could better myself by going with them, and so informed Joe Miller, who said, "If you can better yourself, go; I would do the same if in your place." When I got to Milwaukee I learned that the Red Caps had excelled me for violation of contract, when I never had a contract with them, and my statement under oath to that effect is now in the hands of Mr. N. E. Young, Secretary of the National League. Moreover, the management at St. Paul, in order to vent their spite, have sent to every place where the Manchesters were billed to play letters stating that I was expelled, and asking the different managers to prevent my playing. They haven't succeeded in the matter. These are the facts, and I ask in justice to myself that they be published in your paper. Yours truly,

OSCAR WALKER.

CINCINNATI vs. HARTFORD.

In the second game at Brooklyn, N. Y., this season, between the above clubs, played Aug. 14, Cummings was better supported, Hastings playing behind the bat, while Booth did service at second base. But Cummings' sore wrist gave out in the ninth inning, and in the seventh he was obliged to retire, Booth taking his place. What with Booth's ability to pitch and catch, and to play any other position well, he makes a first-rate general-utility man for a team. In this game he played finely at second base, and pitched in the last three innings with good effect, not a run being earned, though five base-hits were scored off his pitching, the dropped fly-ball at centre-field giving the run scored in the last three innings. Though the Cincinnatis in this game made more base-hits off Larkin than they did the day before, their only earned one was made in the seventh, and Foley's fine base-running assisting them to a run in the ninth. Foley is one of the most promising in the Western nines. He is very active, thoroughly in earnest all the time, does his work pluckily and steadily, and at times makes some beautiful plays. Mc egner, he is a good-natured about his work. The Hartfords did not get on Cummings until the fourth inning, when a single hit by Ferguson and a "corker" over Jones' head by York gave two earned runs. In the fifth, two base hits by Allison and Larkin yielded an earned run, two being scored. In the third inning Booth made a very pretty double play, stopping Foley, and throwing the fly-ball. Holdsworth and Start, who had made base-hits, being caught nicely by the play. A feature of the Cincinnati fielding was the catches made by Pike, two being finely held with one hand in reaching up for high liners. Pike is a splendid outfielder, and quick in handling the ball on the bases, but his left-hand throwing unfits him for second-base playing. On the National side, the feature of their fielding was Allison's catching. He has not superior when he is in the mood for play, as he was in this game. He did not seem to care much for the ninth inning, and he had very swift and inaccurate pitching to attend to. His stopping of low side-pitched balls was wonderful. Judging by his work well in both games. He, too, is one of those faithful workers who is to be rewarded upon for doing his best good-naturedly. Hastings caught Cummings about with but one error, and that, too, with a sore hand. He was hit hard on the face on one occasion, thanks to the wire mask, the blow was scarcely felt. The game was impartially umpired.

BALTIMORE vs. EXCELSIOR.

The Baltimores and Excelsiors played their third championship game at Baltimore, Md., Aug. 17, and the Baltimores managed to score a victory, notwithstanding the Excelsiors excelled them both at the bat and in the field. Wild throwing did the damage. Both clubs improved somewhat in batting, although the pitchiner was very effective. Malone and Boaley fielded without an error. Fillmore made his two errors in the first inning, but after that made some beautiful stops and throws. Welch also made two errors in the first inning, and after that the positions in the field were somewhat changed, the nine only making five errors during the last eight innings. Fillmore and Taylor made their first appearance with the Baltimores, and played well, considering they were somewhat rusty. For the Excelsiors Stewart and Smith played up to nature; Masslen atoned for his two errors by making some very fine stops and throws; Gerbrick made two cooking base-hits, and took a fly in fine style; Scharff had little to do, but did it well; Roche did some good playing, although he had three errors.

R

AT SARATOGA.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

On the breezy piazza, together,
We sat when the sun went down,
Discussing the state of the weather
And the latest arrivals from town;
While the twilight deepened around us
And the stars came out, we sat—
You were eloquent over the weather,
Yet what did you care for that?

The music, you thought, was most charming—
An Offenbach sort of an air—
And you mentioned, as something alarming,
The style of Miss Poynester's hair.
You were really concerned at the shocking
Appearance of somebody's hat,
And dancing, you said, was a nuisance—
Pray, what did you care for that?

I told you, I think, of the races,
And the numerous pools I had lost;
You spoke of Miss Leffingwell's laces,
And guessed at their probable cost.
We criticised, somewhat severely,
Old Bilkins' crimson cravat,
And you laughed at his open attention—
For what did you care for that?

Then growing more pensive, you quoted
A stanza from Byron, and said
You wished you had genius; I voted
That beauty was better instead.
You said that the life of a woman
Was narrow, insipid and flat,
That lovers brought nothing but money—
And what did you care for that?

With the music, the moonlight, the hour,
What wonder our voices grew low?
What wonder I spoke of the power
Which Cupid exerts with his bow?
Ah, well, on the breezy piazza,
With my arm round your waist, we sat,
And you blushed when I said that I loved you—
Though what did you care for that?

Twelve months by the calendar's table—
Twelve months can do wonderful things—
I regret that I shall not be able
To meet you, this year, at the Springs;
But give my regards to your husband,
And pray make him change his cravat,
For I read of your marriage to Bilkins,
And—what did I care for that?

A FIGHT AT CLOSE QUARTERS.

"I've seen a good many single combats in my time," says Colonel C——, sipping his sangaree with an air of unmistakable enjoyment. "I've looked on at fights of two men, two tigers, two elephants, two snakes, and (the most picturesque of all to my mind) two eagles; but the queerest that I ever saw was that I came in for when I was quite a youngster."

"What, when you were in Ceylon?" asked I, knowing by experience that the worthy colonel's stories invariably begin with "When I was quartered in Ceylon."

"Just so, my boy; and as you seem to be fond of queer stories, I'd better just begin at the beginning, and tell you all about it.

"When I first went out, I brought a letter of introduction to a man of the name of T——, a queer old fellow, who had been out there half his life, and knew the whole place by heart. What exact post he held, or whether he held any post at all, I never found out; but, at all events, he was quite cock of the walk in his own district, and had a hand in everything that was done for miles round. As to the natives, he seemed to know all their tricks inside and out; and they all stood in wonderful awe of him, looking upon him as a great conjurer.

"I'll just give you one specimen of the way in which he dealt with them. While I was staying with him, a message came from a neighbour of his, who lived a few miles off, that some things had been stolen the night before, and that, although it was as clear as daylight that it must have been done with the connivance of somebody in the house, yet there was not an atom of proof against the servants, all of whom stoutly protested their innocence; and he would be greatly obliged to Mr. T—— to come over and look into the matter.

"Well, no sooner said than done. T—— and I rode over there to breakfast, and after breakfast all the servants were mustered in a row, and there sat old T—— in a great cane-chair, looking through them (egad! I think I see him now) with an eye just like a gimlet. Then he made them a tip-top speech in their own lingo, telling them that Brahma had appeared to him in a dream, and told him who the thief was; and that, to make its guilt plain to them all, he was going to give a straw to each of them, and the culprit, do what he might, was sure to get the longest.

"The darkies looked awfully frightened, and drew their straws just as though they were casting lots to be hanged. When they had all done, T—— took the straws back, one by one; and as the fifth man delivered his, T—— caught him by the shoulder and shouted: 'You're the thief!'

"Down went the fellow in the dust, and with the most dismal shrieks for mercy confessed he was the thief, and was marched off there and then. When he was gone, I asked T—— how on earth he managed it.

"'Easily enough,' says he; 'the straws were all the same length originally, and the fellow, to make sure of not getting the longest, had bitten a piece off his own by that I knew him!'

"Well, this fellow T—— stuck as I've described him, was just the man to put me up to all the ins and outs of the place, as he expressed it when I first went to him. He began by introducing me to an uncommonly good dinner (which struck me as a very satisfactory commencement), and to his wife, the brightest, merriest little woman I ever met—a great contrast to her dry, quaint old husband; also to his daughter, Sophy, who—— But we won't say anything about her just yet.

"Before tiffin (lunch) next day, T—— had shown me all over the house and grounds; and, last of all, he led me up to a great wooden shed in a corner of the compound (the inclosure around the house, you know), and told me to look in.

"'I kept this sight to the last,' said he with a chuckle, 'for I expect you'll think it the queerest of all. Look in there, and see what you can.'

"At first I could see nothing at all, except a shapeless, brownish mass, from which issued a low, grunting noise, huddled up in one corner, and so I said. But at the sound of my voice the thing suddenly reared itself erect, and ran at me, bellowing fiercely, while a smaller mass detached itself from it and began to bleat aloud. Then I perceived that the hobgoblin was only a queer-looking cow, all covered with thick, coarse hair, with a huge, fleshy hump midway along its neck, and, stranger still, no horns—only two hard knobs where they ought to be.

"Old T—— laughed at my astonishment, and told me that this beast was a present from a native chief, who was a great friend of his—an old gentleman whose name sounded to me exactly like 'Cock-a-doodle-doo,' though I dare say it was a very pretty one according to Singhalese notions.

"'My girl has made quite a pet of her,' said he, 'and carries her something good almost every day. The creature has got to know her, and receives her amicably enough; but she seems to suspect everybody else of a design upon her calf, and shows fight at once, as you see. Now, then, come along in and have a snack; you must want it after all your sight-seeing.'

"And in I went, little dreaming in what a new capacity that same cow was to figure before I had done with her.

"Next morning a native shikari (hunter) came in with news that a cheetah (leopard) had ensconced itself in a grove not far from the house; and T——, who was a keen sportsman, sallied forth at once, taking me along with him.

"We were not long sighting our game; but, to our great disappointment, it was lying crouched behind a tree in such a way that its head was quite sheltered, and nothing visible but a little bit of the flank. However, T—— was not to be baulked; he tramped steadily up to it, and I followed—with very much the same feelings wherewith I used to enter the dentist's waiting-room in my schoolboy days. The moment he got well within range, he up piece and let fly.

"Then came a nasty, snarling yell, which made me feel cold all over, and out rushed the beast a thundering big one, too, and charged right at us. The natives all bolted instantly, but T—— stood his ground like a rock, and was just going to give him the second barrel when the brute dropped its head, turned sharp round in its tracks, and flew like a rocket after the niggers. We saw the hindmost of them go down as if he'd been ridden over by a dragoon; but, to our amazement, the cheetah, instead of stopping to mangle him, went off at top speed into the bushes, and disappeared. And, stranger still, the man himself, though he had got a terrible gash across the shoulder, was able to stand up, and even to walk off the ground with a little support from us.

"'Now, however, was inconsolable at the loss of his cheetah. He vowed that he had hit it fair, that it couldn't go far with such a hurt, and that have it he would, if he beat the whole country for ten miles round. And so we trudged home again.

"Late that evening my host and I were sitting on the verandah, talking over the day's work, and the ladies had just gone in to see after the coffee (which I rather regretted, for I liked to see Miss Sophy's bright eyes sparkle at the account of our sport, even though I had had such a small share in it myself), when one of T——'s syces (grooms) came rushing up with his hands higher than his head, so out of breath that all he could get out was 'O Sahib!' But he kept pointing to the corner of the compound, and we saw at once there was something wrong. I jumped up and got hold of my pistols (for, like all Griffins, I was constantly on the lookout to 'pot' something); T——, whose mind always ran upon snakes when there was any alarm in the household, seized a big stick, and out we rushed.

"There was no need to ask which way we should go, for at that moment there began such a Babel of queer sounds—bleating, bellowing, mewing, squeaking and yelping, as if all the beasts in the ark had fallen foul of each other at once; and, moreover, all this rumpus seemed to proceed from the cow-shed.

"We ran towards it as hard as we could tear; but before we reached it there went up suddenly a horrid, shrill squall, which there was no mistaking.

"'A cheetah, by Jove!' shouted T——; 'but where on earth can the brute be, then? Hollo! Why, I'll be hanged if it isn't in the shed!'

"In the shed it was sure enough, and evidently having a hard time of it, too; for we could hear its cries mingling with the snorting and bellowing of the cow and the scuffling of hoofs and paws, as the two thumped and banged about the inside. I rushed to the window-hole in hopes of a shot; but the place was pitch-dark, and, strain my eyes as I might, all that I could see was a confused whirl of shadows, and the cheetah's fiery eyes glancing about in the middle of it.

"However, I could make out one thing well enough, and that was that Master Cheetah was getting decidedly the worst of it. His cries grew shriller and more distressed every minute, as though he had got something he did not like; and every now and then there came a thump and a scrunch against the planking that made it tremble from top to bottom. Horns or no horns, the old lady was evidently giving him as good as he brought, and something over, and my assurances on this score somewhat tranquillized my friend T——, who had been in great tribulation at the thought of his daughter's favorite being slaughtered in this way before his very eyes.

"Just at that moment two or three of the servants came running up with lights, and then I did see a sight, and no mistake.

"The poor little calf was crouching in a corner, bleating piteously and half dead with fright. The cheetah was huddled up on the other side, evidently quite done up by the last round, with his great mouth open in a horrid gasp, and his ugly fangs showing white and gruesome in the torchlight; while over him stood the cow, with her head drawn back wickedly, making ready to give him a settler. But before she could strike I took good aim at his head with my pistol, and shot him dead on the spot.

"It was no easy matter to get hold of the carcass, for the cow was quite wild, and did not know friend from foe. However, we did get him lugged out at last, and the moment T—— set his eyes on him he gave a shout that made the whole place echo.

"'This is my cheetah, by Jove!' he exclaimed; 'here's the very place where I hit him in the side, and the yellow star on his forehead, which I noticed when I was taking aim the second time. So he's come to me himself, instead of giving me the bother of going after him! Well, this is a lark, and no mistake!'

"You may imagine how the ladies rejoiced over our victory; and, despite my modest disclaimers, nothing would persuade Miss Sophy that I had not killed the cheetah single-handed, to rescue her favorite. Her father, who was fond of a joke, quite kept up the notion; and—and, in short, the affair paved the way for her assuming that position which (as testimonial addresses say) she now so worthily holds. Ah, Sophy, my dear, here you are! I've just been telling K—— about that cheetah business in Ceylon."

GLUE AS A CURE FOR CUTS.—A correspondent of The Scientific American writes as follows: "For the past twelve or fourteen years I have been employed in a shop where there are over three hundred at work, and, as is the case in all shops of this kind, hardly a day passes without one or more of us cut or bruise our limbs. At first there were but few who found their way to my department to have their wounds bound up, but after a while it became generally known that a rag glued on a fleshwound was not only a speedy curative, but an effectual protection against further injury. I was soon obliged to keep a supply of rags on hand to be ready for emergency. I will here cite one among the many cases cured by glue: A man was running a boring-machine, with an inch and a quarter augur attached. By some means the sleeve of his shirt caught in the augur, bringing his wrist in contact with the bit, tearing the flesh among the muscles in a frightful manner. He was conducted to my department (the pattern shop), and I washed the wound in warm water, and glued around it a cloth, which, when dry, shrunk into a rounded shape, holding the wound tight and firm. Once or twice a week, for three or four weeks, I dressed the wound afresh, and it was well. The man never lost an hour's time in consequence. The truth of this hundreds can testify to. I use, of course, the best quality of glue."

A PECULIAR INDUSTRY of California is threatened with great loss, namely, the wholesale honey-manufacturing business. In Southern California the fields are covered with a wild flowering plant upon which bees greedily feed, and fill their pouches to empty into the hive-board. The residents of the region all have a large number of hives upon their farms, and many persons obtain their livelihood by taking care of the bees. The profits of the business were increased by the use of an instrument by which all the honey was removed from the comb, and the wax-cells were returned to the despoiled cells. Owing to a severe drought, this flower-plant has been destroyed.

STEREOTYPE PRINTING was used in Holland early in the last century. The rollers for inking the type were invented by Nicholson. Stereotype printing was introduced into London by Wilson in 1804.

AMUSEMENT ANNALS—CLIPPER SERIES, NO. XXII.

DEATH OF HATTIE HAMILTON.

Brief as it is, the appended note conveys sad intelligence:

AUGUST 10, 1877.

FRANK QUEEN, Esq.—Sir: I hereby give you notice of the death of Mrs. Claude Hamilton, after an exceedingly long and painful illness, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Col. Austin, of Laporte, Ind. She died of cancer.

Respectfully yours,
F. AUSTIN.

One by one those who within the past quarter of a century have graced the American stage are passing away. Mrs. Hattie Hamilton—as she was professionally known of late years, though the elders of the stage will recall her as Hattie Bernard—was a most estimable lady in public life, and in private conspicuous for her charities, it being scarcely three months since, although herself confined to the sick-room by one of the most terrible of ailments, she contributed her mite towards the relief of the widow of a once prominent actor. Mrs. Hamilton was born in Taunton, Eng., on Aug. 4, 1823. Early in life she became related to the recently deceased English dramatist Bayle Bernard through her marriage to his brother Lionel, son of John Bernard, a Boston (Mass.) manager, over a half century ago, and subsequently one of the notabilities in the theatrical circles of England. With her husband Mrs. Bernard came to America about thirty-two years ago. It had been published of her in 1870 that she first appeared in this country at the Boston Museum. Desiring to fix the time and ascertain the part, we telegraphed to Mr. R. M. Field, manager of that house, and in answer received this dispatch, which is by no means conclusive, as we have a bill of the Museum of November, 1864, in which she is assigned a minor part and also announced to sing between pieces.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 17, 1877.

FRANK QUEEN.—Hattie Bernard never played at Boston Museum, to my knowledge.
GEO. W. BLATCHFORD, Treasurer.

Our next earliest knowledge of her is that she was at the Cincinnati theatres as far back as 1851. Her first appearance in this city, where she was regarded as the best exponent of Fanny Squeers in "Nicholas Nickleby" the metropolitan stage had ever known, was at Burton's Chambers-street Theatre, at which establishment she was engaged as singing-chambermaid, making her initial bow on Aug. 23, 1852, as Mme. Galochard in "The King's Gardener." Her vocal ability was also called into requisition at Castle Garden on the occasion of the centennial of the alleged introduction of the drama into America, when she played Mrs. Riot in the venerable piece called "Lethe," singing the music arranged for it by the late John P. Cooke, then orchestral leader at Burton's. She remained at Burton's but one season, and then went into the Western Circuit, including Pittsburg, Columbus, etc., being at the late Joseph C. Foster's theatre, Cleveland, in the Summer of 1853. Her husband, who in 1860-1-2 was at the Pittsburg (Pa.) and Columbus (O.) Theatres, died fifteen years ago. In 1863, she was at the Nashville Theatre under S. B. Duffield, and in the Spring of 1864, having left Nashville in December of 1863 with the intention of going to the Howard Athenæum, Boston, she was at Wood's Museum, Chicago, in which city, on July 27 following, she was married to Claude Hamilton, the leading man at the Athenæum, Detroit, but who in the previous year was at the Nashville Theatre. Her first engagement after her second marriage was at the Detroit Athenæum, beginning Aug. 29, 1864, she and her husband doing leading business, as they did also at the Louisville (Ky.) Theatre during the season beginning Sept. 2, 1865. They appeared together for several seasons at the South, and during one season in Brooklyn. On July 12, 1869, while she was in this city, her husband died in Washington, D. C. His last appearance on the stage had been on the 8th of that month, at the National Theatre, in that city, for the benefit of Miss Annette Ince, who played Ion to his Adrastus, one of whose lines is: "Oh, that I could die alone, without a hand to interpose." And so he died, of sunstroke, four days later, his body being found by a policeman near the Executive Mansion. It is noteworthy as a coincidence that Mr. Bernard, who had played on the night of Jan. 24, 1862, at the Columbus Theatre, complained on the following morning of dizziness, and, returning home from the street, sank insensible to the sidewalk, and died that day. His remains were removed to Cleveland, O., where his widow and daughter then resided. Mrs. Hamilton's first notable appearance after being a second time widowed was as leading lady of the Rochester (N. Y.) Opera-house for the season of 1871-2, opening Aug. 26 as Eugenia in "Sweethearts and Wives." She had continued in the profession until about fifteen months ago, her last season, we believe, being that of 1875-6, passed in Toronto and Canada. Throughout her severe illness, borne with exemplary fortitude, she resided in Laporte, Ind.

A REMINDER OF MME. VESTRIS.

The limits of our space forbid any further reference to the accompanying bill, forwarded by G. F. Fisher of Boston, than that it gives the original cast of "The Captain of the Watch" at Covent-garden, and that the Mrs. Brougham who played Hippolite was the second wife of our John Brougham, and died in this city June 30, 1865.

THE WHITE MILLINER.

MRS. JOHN CLARKE.

A cable dispatch last week announced the death of the wife of the English comedian so frequently confounded with the American John S. Clarke, also in England. The lady was professionally known by her maiden name of Teresa Furtado. She was the daughter of a London musician, who is likewise of repute as a teacher of elocution. She was born about 1844, and her London debut, as recorded by The Era, was made at the New Royalty Theatre on Feb. 8, 1864, when she impersonated Mercury in "Ixion." She married John Clarke about 1872, and it was their half-formed purpose to visit the United States professionally in 1878; but the intention was not carried out, although managers on this side were desirous of securing the lady's services. Prior to her marriage she was a great favorite at the Adelphi and Princess's, and as to personal beauty she shared the honors with Adelaide Neilson, being regarded as a belle of the London stage. Her style, which was broad in treatment and refined in character, was, like her temperament, compared with that of the French actress Desclee, who preceded her to the grave.

MISS GENEVIEVE ROGERS,

of whom we present a portrait, was born in Louisville, Ky., April 9, 1859. She is of a theatrical family, her father being J. Howard Rogers, the well-known scenic artist, and her mother, now in retirement, held for a long time a prominent position on the American stage. Miss Rogers made her first appearance on the stage at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., when a little over four years of age, acting the child in "The Enchantress," with Miss Caroline Richings as the star. Her pleasing manners and pretty face made her a favorite at once. She continued there, playing the cruelly-used unhappy round of children characters, until 1868, when she was engaged at the Boston Museum, where she made a hit as little Arthur Leigh in "Rosedale." During that season she also acted Puck in "A Midsummer-night's Dream" during a long run at the Continental Theatre. All this time she was being educated at the Dudley School, where her aptitude for study and her diligence won the commendation of her teachers. In 1869 she removed with her parents to Chicago, Ill., where she completed her education. In April, 1873, she returned to the stage as a star, under the direction of Frank E. Aiken, who, although a comparatively young man, was for several years one of the leading managers in Chicago. Relying upon Mr. Aiken's judgment, managers of first-class theatres throughout the country did not hesitate to receive Miss Rogers in their houses as a star, and in every city where she appeared she not only won the good will of her audiences, but stamped herself as an artist of unusual promise. During the season of 1875-6 she acted a wide range of characters, the most prominent of which were Kate Calvert in "The Virginian," Juliana in "The Honeymoon," Parthenia in "Ingomar," Peg Woffington in "Masks and Faces," Hester Arncliffe in "An Unequal Match," and Grace Holden in "Prince Holden's Secret." In September, 1876, she acted for the first time the title-character in "Maud Muller," and during that season she confined her professional efforts to that character, acting it in all of the principal cities of the country. In March last she fulfilled a star engagement at the Boston Museum, making her first appearance in that city since her childhood, and attracted large audiences. The press of that city were quite enthusiastic in her praise. During the coming season she will make a tour of the country under the continued management of Frank E. Aiken—to whom she is under a five years' contract from April, 1875—and will be supported by a talented company, who will travel with her. Her repertory will be strengthened by the addition of a new play by B. E. Woolf, the author of "The Mighty Dollar," and another by Miss Emma Schiff, the well-known English authoress.

THE GREAT O. P. RIOTS
AT THE
COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE, LONDON, IN 1809.

COMPILED FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER FROM DOCUMENTS, NEWSPAPER REPORTS AND PROGRAMMES NOW IN POSSESSION OF MR. GEO. W. THOMPSON.

[The Covent-garden Theatre, London, was opened by Richard Devoy in 1732. On Sept. 20, 1808, it was burned down, twenty persons losing their lives. It was rebuilt and was opened on Sept. 18, 1809, with a new scale of prices. The populace demanded a return to the old prices. It was not until the middle of the following December that the rioting ceased. It is the purpose of this series of papers to delineate its progress.—ED. CLIPPER.]

SEPTEMBER 29, 1809 (CONTINUED).

Here terminated one week—such a week as no dramatic annals can parallel. From Monday to Saturday, inclusive, a play and a farce had been performed each evening, and not a single sentence had been distinctly heard from any part of the theatre. The performance this evening terminated at half-past nine. The audience manifested no symptoms, however, of leaving. An Irish gentleman addressed the people very unintelligibly about Mr. Kemble's insulting conduct on Tuesday night. This added new fuel to the fire of discontent. Mr. Kemble, after being loudly called for, appeared and announced that the theatre would close, and not reopen until the committee selected had examined the books and accounts of the proprietors. After the display of three or four obscene caricatures (which caused the females in the boxes to retire), and several skirmishes, the house was cleared at a quarter to eleven o'clock.

OCTOBER 2, 1809.

On this day the following advertisement appeared in the papers:

The committee for examining the affairs of Covent-garden Theatre, consisting of the following gentlemen: Alderman Sir Charles Price, Bart., M. P.!!! Sir Thomas Plumer (Knight), His Majesty's Solicitor-general!!! John Sylvester, Esq., Recorder of the City of London!!! John Whitemore, Esq., Governor of the Bank of England!!! John Julius Angerstein, Esq., have authorised the proprietors to publish the following report in their names: We do hereby certify that, after a full and attentive examination of the subject which we have been directed to investigate by the proprietors of the Covent-garden Theatre, for the satisfaction of the public, in respect to the rate of profit received by them from the late theatre, and likely to be received from the new, that the following is the result of our inquiry: The rate of profits actually received, upon an average of the last six years, commencing in 1803 (the period of the present copartnership) in the theatre, upon the capital embarked therein, we have ascertained to have amounted to 6¾ per cent. per annum, charging the concern with only the sum actually paid for insurance on such part of the capital as was insured. But if the whole of the profits had been insured, the profit would have been reduced to very little more than 5 per cent.; and, for want of this full insurance, the proprietors themselves have sustained a loss by the late fire, for which no compensation has been made, to the amount of more than the whole of their profits for the above period of six years. The rate of profit likely to be received in future from the new theatre, depending upon the amount of bills not yet delivered, and of estimates not fully ascertained, and on the future receipts of the house, which are various contingencies, cannot be ascertained with the same degree of certainty. But upon the best consideration we have been able to give to this subject, after having recourse to every source of information, clear and written, we are fully satisfied that the future profits of the new theatre, at the proposed advance in the prices of admission, will amount to only 3¾ per cent. per annum upon the capital expended in the theatre, if the same be insured; and that upon the same supposition of insurance at the former prices of admission the proprietors will, in our judgment, annually sustain a loss of nearly 3¼ per cent. per annum on their capital.

CHARLES PRICE. THOMAS PLUMER. JOHN SYLVESTER. JOHN WHITEMORE. JOHN JULIUS ANGERSTEIN.

On Sept. 27, 1809, the following statement appeared in the morning newspapers:

The proprietors of the New Covent-garden Theatre have the honor of presenting to the public the report of the gentlemen who kindly undertook the investigation of the accounts of the theatre, and cannot doubt but it will be found a liberal and enlightened people will now be convinced that the alteration in the prices arises solely from the impossibility of their continuing the public amusements on the former terms of admission. A statement of the accounts of Covent-garden Theatre for the last six years. Most respectfully offered to the public.

EUROPEAN DRAMATIC AND OPERATIC NOVELTIES

"DAUGHTER OF EVE."

A new three-act drama by Paul Merritt, bearing the above title, was first performed at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, Birmingham, Eng., on Monday evening, July 30. A correspondent says of it:

In the new drama the curtain rises upon a beautiful lawn in front of the mansion of Lady Glenmore. A fountain is fixed in the centre, and the pretty flower-beds and the surroundings make up a most picturesque and charming scene. Here Gideon Bulb, a poet-gardener, is engaged lending assistance to nature. In a moment Ninon, Lady Glenmore's French maid, enters, and is shortly afterwards followed by Lilian Somers and Sir Tarquin Belpher. While Lillian is engaged in conversation with the gardener Sir Tarquin approaches Ninon, and inquires whether he is expected there by Lady Glenmore. Ninon replies that her ladyship is not only not expecting him, but is looking forward to a visit from Mr. Flaxton, a young gentleman who had just been elected Member of Parliament for Cottontown, and who is coming to the mansion that day to receive her ladyship's congratulations, she having on many occasions expressed an interest in him. Sir Tarquin, the object of whose visit is to propose marriage to the widowed lady of Glenmore Castle, sees in the young M. P. a rival, and his suspicions are confirmed as he learns from Ninon that her ladyship loves Mr. Flaxton "terrifique." Sir Tarquin, knowing that Lady Glenmore is proud of her noble lineage, and that upon that point she is sensitive, determines to take the first opportunity of making Flaxton ridiculous in her eyes by reminding her that the young parliamentary enthusiast has neither birth nor family to recommend him. While Sir Tarquin is coquetting with Ninon, and at the same time catechizing her upon the subject of her mistress' relationship to Mr. Flaxton, her ladyship approaches the terrace unobserved; and when Sir Tarquin is in the act of kissing Ninon, she is seen, and the maid makes her exit. Lady Glenmore is greeted by Sir Tarquin, who compliments her upon looking "as lovely as a sunset upon a cornfield," to which her ladyship somewhat indignantly, and with a cold and haughty inclination of the head, retorts that she does not like agricultural compliments. A good deal of badinage follows, in the course of which Sir Tarquin protests his love for her ladyship, and appeals to her not to torture him by her icy indifference. Aside, Lady Glenmore soliloquizes that, if Leonard Flaxton would but talk to her of love, she would be happy, and questions herself as to whether it would not be better to accept Sir Tarquin's offer and stifle her yearning for Leonard. Taking this view of affairs, her ladyship tenders the encouraging remark that Sir Tarquin may perhaps find that she has not been so cold as he imagined. Just as the baronet is congratulating himself upon moving her ladyship's sympathies towards him, the maid announces the arrival of Mr. Flaxton. The mention of his name acts as a deathknell to Sir Tarquin's hopes. Her ladyship cautions him that no one is to know of his visit, and retires for a time again, but he replies, tauntingly, that for a time he may be silent, "but you shall yet be my wife, or no one's." Lillian at this time crosses the terrace, and in answer to Sir Tarquin's inquiry as to her relations to Miss Somers explains that Miss Somers is an orphan for whom she had conceived a strange affection, rendered the greater by her knowledge of Lillian's own unfortunate birth. Sir Tarquin inquires anxiously about the nature of the misfortune; but her ladyship states that it is a secret, and declines to reveal it; whereupon Sir Tarquin suggests that the best position for an orphan girl is a good husband; but her ladyship increases the difficulty by observing that, although she believes Lillian to be a pure-minded girl, yet until the unpardoning law has been cleared up she is not a fit wife for an honest and honorable man. This reflection upon Lillian embarrasses Sir Tarquin, and he mentions that he has just learned from her ladyship's own lips that reminds him of a lady he met some eighteen or nineteen years ago—a Corsican lady named Carlotta Valetti, a singer at the Opera Comique, Paris. Her ladyship, he explains, married a wealthy nobleman, and returned to Corsica, but afterwards her villa at Montosi was attacked, the attacking party being headed by a former lover of her husband's wife. Her husband, and only child, a daughter, was stolen, probably afterwards to share the same fate. Her ladyship becomes agitated, and Sir Tarquin ultimately ends by telling her that he had found the child eighteen years ago. At this moment Flaxton enters, and Lady Glenmore congratulates him upon his parliamentary success, and introduces him to Sir Tarquin, who takes the first opportunity of taunting Flaxton in the presence of Lady Glenmore with his plebeian birth. Her ladyship, however, interferes, and rebukes Sir Tarquin by stating that a member of Parliament was a guest, out of respect to their ancestors. Sir Tarquin strolls away, and Lady Glenmore and Mr. Flaxton are left together, when it is learned that the newly elected member of Parliament has visited her ladyship's mansion with the view of seeing Lilian. This announcement takes her ladyship by surprise, and a scene of great interest ensues. Reconciled to the fact that Flaxton has unexpected turn in events had taken, Lady Glenmore orders some wine and a small perfume-casket from her boudoir, determined to marry Lillian to Flaxton, and thus prove that exist with the knowledge that any man had the power to boast of her weakness or to insult her with his pity. She is about to pour the poison into the glass when voices are heard, Flaxton returns, accompanied by Lilian. Lady Glenmore retires, and a long interview takes place between the lovers. In the course of this her ladyship is heard to say that she has obeyed the voice of love which have striven in vain; but wait before you exult in your triumph, Lillian Somers. They laugh best who laugh last." Sir Tarquin, who has overheard the last remark, enters her ladyship. Flaxton and Lilian are espied in close conversation, and her ladyship's attention is drawn to them by Sir Tarquin, who remarks that her ladyship's manufacturing friend seems very much impressed with Miss Somers. Lady Glenmore assures Sir Tarquin that Flaxton had come there simply at her invitation to offer his protection for Miss Somers, and for the purpose of paying to his paying his addresses to her. Sir Tarquin expresses his satisfaction at this explanation, and her ladyship, quietly thinking of the bottle of poison, determines to use other means to gratify her revenge. She had intended the poison for Flaxton and herself; but now, if he woo and win Lillian, disgrace and dishonor shall be the weapons she will employ. Sir Tarquin goes to London for a month, and the curtain rises in the second act upon a most elegantly furnished apartment in Lady Glenmore's mansion. Sir Tarquin is discovered by Ninon. Before making his arrival known, however, he questions Ninon as to what has taken place during his absence, and learns that Flaxton and Lillian are to be married at once, and that the marriage is to be kept a secret. Her ladyship enters, richly dressed and ready for the approaching wedding. Not observing Sir Tarquin, she sits down and writes a letter to the Inspector of police, informing him that he will call there about one o'clock he will have an opportunity of arresting Lillian Somers, who had been charged with robbery at Jersey, and who had absconded. She informs Sir Tarquin, under a promise of secrecy, that she intends striking Flaxton a blow, and enjoins him, if he would win her regard, to let not an opportunity escape, in the assistance of Flaxton's misery, of giving a biting sneer. She then explains that Lilian had been a governess to a French family at Jersey; that whilst there a large sum of money and a quantity of jewels were stolen; that Lilian was accused of the robbery; that she fled in order to escape prosecution, and brought to Glenmore a letter of introduction from one Father Angelo. A knock is here heard, and Sir Tarquin makes his exit. Lilian then enters, and Lady Glenmore congratulates her upon her appearance; but no sooner does she learn that Sir Tarquin has arrived at Mr. Flaxton. The mention of his name acts as a deathknell to Sir Tarquin's hopes. Her ladyship cautions him that no one is to know of his visit, and retires for a time again, but he replies, tauntingly, that for a time he may be silent, "but you shall yet be my wife, or no one's." INTRODUCTORY.

MONDAY, Aug. 20, '77.

"Correct returns" are given in this old and reliable journal as fast as companies are completed, and the "component parts" of the same allotted their respective positions. When the times are so sadly out of joint, and actors so out of joints as they have been during the past season, we find less inclination among players to insist upon a certain line of business, managers claiming that the members of their troupes should put their shoulders to the wheel, and make themselves generally useful, and so we find less kicking and squirming when a first low comedian is required to do the leading tragedy part when the regular is indisposed as per physician's certificate. Nor is our admiration for the leading juvenile man less when he, in order to contribute to the harmony of the cast, consents, without a murmur, to appear as the first gravedigger in "Hamlet," and toss up the skull of "Alas poor Yorick." And when we behold the leading lady fearlessly rushing into the breach to save the fortunes of the house by doing the old woman, we feel like throwing our arms around her swanlike neck, and showering upon her lily-white brow the tenderest of kisses. Nay, more, when we discover the heavy villain of the company sacrificing himself and his calling by playing the young person who exclaims "A letter, my lord," we have no compunctions of conscience when he invites us to come up and see him, and thus encourage him, just the same as though he were the same desperate villain that we have ever known him to be. Yea, we have none but the best feelings for the pretty soubrette who, perforse—or forsooth; it is immaterial which—when directed to look up, and do a little dark business, gets out the burnt cork, and assumes a complexion she cannot feel. Ah! that is something which should entitle her to a marble monument when she shall have shuffled off this mortal coil, and put on a coil of immortality. We say that we are delighted to see this improved condition of things between manager and people; the interest of the one is the interest of the other—as the dreadful Communist would say: "all for one, and one for all." It is the duty of each and every member of the fraternity to stand up for his profession, to defend it from the assaults of those bigoted bipeds who affect to see nothing virtuous outside of their own calling. We pity such unbelievers, for they must lead a very unhappy and envious lives. It was in '49, when the gold fever broke out in California—No! that was another affair. We think it was during the Mexican War, if our memory has not been disturbed by the force of circumstances which follow or surround a man, no matter where fortune, or misfortune, rather—may lead him, and frequently entice him to his undoing, as many of you are aware; and it is not alone in Thespian ranks that this governing power controls the human mind, but in all other branches of our political jurisprudence. When the soul is warped by the ignus fatuus of the time, and the pure and wholesome thoughts which rise uppermost are given a clean backfall by the superior excellence of a motive power which actuates those who—[Jimmy, where are we, any how? Where did we start for? "You was fust among the 49ers on your way to Californy; but you switched off, owing to the railroad strikes, and made tracks for the Halls of the Monte-sumers in the Mexican War." Right you are; but we'll pass 'em both for the present, and make some other connection.].....Want to tell you of a good thing we got off the other day. A dramatic actor was complaining of the decease of intemperance, and of the baneful influence it has upon the best of men. "Now, there's Jones," says he, "who lives across the way, who never calls except when he's full, he runs over!.....Again we hear with pain that Salvini is going to retire forever from the stage—this time in a new Biblical drama entitled "Gideon." Just so; he will hereafter "belong to Gideon's band!".....Pardon us while we introduce a few lines of poetry to make a break in this solid column:

.....Did you ever know of any new play that was not in "active preparation," or of a sick actor who was not "rapidly recovering?".....And in the hottest part of the past week we hurried home a bevy of professionals at Long Branch by writing to them that we were sleeping under blankets! I suppose the Turkeys should gobble him up, what good would his singing be then, poor thing! We fear to pursue the subject farther.....A little gossip: They say that a pious pastor, becoming enamored of a youthful and beautiful actress, sought to inveigle her into the meshes of Hymen; but she, being already a loving, virtuous wife, which he was not aware of, repulsed him with scorn, and related the circumstance to her husband. Burning with indignation at the hypocrisy of the pious hypocrite, the outraged husband armed himself with a revolver and a carving-knife, and sought out the would-be destroyer of his domestic happiness. (Here we are obliged to break off the story, as the last seen of the outraged husband was at Coney Island, where he was enjoying the luxuries of a clambake and trimmings.—ED.) Truly, hell hath no fury like a woman scorned.....When Dom Pedro flashed through this city last Fall, we took him to see the San Francisco Minstrels; you never saw a man so delighted. "Why," says he, "they even go ahead of the real darkies." We were eating pie when she came, but, naught dismayed, she said that she was the wife of a hell-begotten old screw, and she wanted to know what she should do in such a case. We always take the side of injured innocence, and we advised her to entice him into our sanctum some day, and we would soon put a quietus to the old scoundrel. Somehow, we seem to be growing as fond of idyls as the Chinese. Ignoramuses are trying to convey the impression that the author of "The Danites" is the versatile Jo Miller of jocular fame; but this we are in a position to pronounce a lie! Jo the jester has been gathered to his fathers a matter of one hundred and forty years, so he couldn't write a play now if he wanted to.

"NOT FOR JO."

A play by Jo Miller you'd think would be funny,
But the author is poet, not clown;
We hope it will open the Broadway to fortune,
And be the success of the town.

You hadn't better talk on subjects of which you know NOTHING. [His agent De Nyse ain't of the abuv.—OUR JIM.].....We understand that there is a good deal of grumbling and fault-finding among original dramatists and half-souled newspapers because Ooofty Gooft, in giving to the public a thrilling work now running through THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, "The Bonebolier of Weehawken," has "reserved all rights," thus depriving them of the opportunity of presenting "Kreitzmeyer's Revenge" in a dramatic form on some of our first-class theatres. We cannot see where Mr. Gooft has acted in any way different from other authors whose works contain features of intense dramatic interest. Surely, "the laborer is worthy of his hire," and why the parties named should single out Mr. Gooft as a target for their unmanly assaults must have some hidden meaning that has not yet come to the surface. The author has been at great expense and trouble to procure facts with which to enrich "The Bonebolier," and we ask if it would be honest or justifiable for any dramatist—other than himself—to profit by the sweat of his brow? We cannot perceive one single reason to justify these Bohemians in their communistic assaults.

CITY SUMMARY.

A MISTAKE.—In our past issue we stated that "Stuart Robson and W. H. Crane are to commence an engagement at the Park Theatre Jan. 28, 1878." Our authority for this was Mr. Robson. The following letter from that gentleman will explain:

CohassET, MASS., Aug. 17, 1877.

EDITOR OF THE CLIPPER.—Dear Sir: Since my announcement to you of the date of our coming engagement at the Park Theatre, negotiations have fallen through. I regret exceedingly that I have placed you in this position. Mr. Boucicault wrote to me last week: "I have contracted to play you at the Park Theatre Jan. 28." It seems that Mr. French called upon Mr. Boucicault, and represented that he had authority to close the engagement after Mr. Boucicault had announced it to me. Mr. Abbey called upon him and stated that Mr. French had no authority to close the engagement, as offered later time, which Mr. Boucicault refused. Respectfully yours,
STUART ROBSON.

BOOTH'S THEATRE is to be let by the week or month. See card.

W. E. CHAPMAN, who returned from England in the steamship Alsatia Aug. 10, will be the business-manager of John Brougham's Combination next season.

MR. F. S. CHANFRAU, and not Mrs. Chanfrau, is to play two weeks in the Grand Opera-house, commencing Sept. 3.

FLYMON E. GARRETT, formerly agent for the Amy Sedgwick Troupe, was married lately to Miss Annie McLeod, a non-professional of this city.

MR. AND MRS. P. T. BARNUM returned from England in the steamship Scythia, which arrived in port Aug. 15. On the voyage Mr. Barnum delivered a lecture, at the request of the officers and many of the passengers, and subsequently quite a sum of money was contributed to the fund for the benefit of widows and orphans of seamen. Mr. and Mrs. Barnum have gone to their home, in Bridgeport, Ct.

TONY PASTOR'S THEATRE was opened Aug. 13 by the E. B. Holmes Variety Combination, but the theatre suddenly closed the following night.

AT THE OLYMPIC THEATRE COMIQUE the programme given on the opening night, which was reviewed in our past issue, was continued the past week without change, to a fair average business.

SOME CHANGES were made in the cast of "Baby" at the Park Theatre, Aug. 13. J. W. Collier replaced F. Thorne as Willie St. Paul (Baby); Miss Minnie Doyle, Miss Linda Dietz as Mme. Aurelia; and Miss Connie Thompson, Mrs. Frank Murdoch as Susan. All of these were satisfactory, and in some respects superior to their predecessors. Mr. Collier delineated the two phases of Baby's character in a more marked degree. He was made up to look quite youthful, and his entire impersonation is deserving of commendation. Miss Doyle acted with more abandon than did Miss Dietz, and Miss Thompson was pert, saucy and effective as Susan. Business good.

EFFIE JOHNS and a company left Cincinnati, O., the 17 in the steamship Atlas for Kingston, Jamaica. Among the company are Louis Meredith and Miss Alda Lawrence.

JAMES WARD of Philadelphia arrived in town during the past week.

T. G. RIGGS left for Cincinnati, O., Aug. 17. During the season he will produce a new Irish drama.

MISS IDA IDALIE, dancer, and her mother, sailed for Europe Aug. 17, in the steamship Denmark, which was to have sailed 16, but was seized by the U. S. Government and held until 5 o'clock P. M., 17, when she was allowed to depart, the steamship Spain of the same line being offered by the company and accepted by the Government as a substitute and security for her.

AT THE LONDON, the fresh arrivals this week are to be Reynolds and Walling, the Miranda Sisters, Alf. McDowell and Fannie Knight. The following of last week's company are to be retained: Burton Stanley, Hattie and Bennie Grinnell, Mullen and Magee, Healy, Conway and Ella Saunders, Jerry Cohan, Connors and Kelly, Charles Chrisdie and the Zanfretta Troupe.

AT ABERLE'S TIVOLI THEATRE, the company this week includes Murphy and Shannon, Millie La Font, the twin sisters French, the Eccentric Four, Emma Hoffman, a ballet troupe led by Caroline Schrotter, Jennie Fagan and Josie Farron, and a pantomime company headed by Grimaldi Zellner.

CALL.—The ladies and gentlemen engaged for the opening piece, "Under the Willows," at the Lyceum Theatre, are requested to assemble for rehearsal Aug. 23, as per card of Manager C. R. Thorne.

THE FALL AND WINTER SEASON at Niblo's Garden is to commence Sept. 3. The following performers have already been engaged: Master Bates, J. H. Rowe, E. W. Marston, J. H. Brown (stage-manager), the Misses Gussie De Forrest, Agnes Preston and Georgie Dickson.

NICK ROBERTS' "Humpty Dumpty" Troupe will commence its season at Tony Pastor's Opera-house Sept. 10, and then visit the principal cities.

COOPER, BAILEY & CO., proprietors of the Great International Allied Shows, now traveling in Australia, are in this city, making extensive purchases of wild animals and museum stuff. They have already secured, among others, a den of hyenas, several leopards, an eland, a horned horse, and the monster double-horned hairy rhinoceros now at the aquarium at Coney Island. They advertise for curiosities, and mention a number of people whom they desire to communicate with.

AT THE VOLES' GARDEN, the new faces this week will be Larry Tooley and Hannah Birch, Banker and Mills, J. W. McAndrews, the Dailys—Bobby and Alice—Seamon and Somers, Mlle. De Saville, the Arizona Bros., Miss Gussie Viola, and Andy Collom.

THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE was opened Aug. 13 with Joseph Murphy and his combination, who acted "Kerry Gow." The drama was well mounted, and attracted a moderately fair attendance. It was, as a whole, fairly performed. Besides Mr. Murphy's well-known impersonation of Dan O'Hara, Miss Annie Ward Tiffany is to be commended for a faithful and pleasing portraiture of Norah Drew; Miss Addie Mortimer acted Alice Doyle quite satisfactorily; W. M. Ward was effective as Major Gruff; J. A. Wilkes renewed the success which attended his previous performance of Mr. O'Drive in this city; C. B. Hawkins made quite a hit as the stuttering Sergeant Bull; and the other characters were represented in a careful and painstaking manner. As a matter of record, the full cast is appended: Dan O'Hara, Joseph Murphy; Major Gruff, W. M. Ward; Patrick Drew, W. H. Wallis; Raymond Drew, H. S. Duffield; Capt. Basil Sydney, A. G. Enos; Sergeant Bull, C. B. Hawkins; Valentine Hay, J. M. Murray; Mr. O'Drive, J. A. Wilkes; Dennis Doyle, J. Maltby; Boy Bill, Miss Carrie Bray; Officer, C. Atkins; Norah Drew, Miss A. W. Tiffany; Alice Doyle, Miss A. Mortimer.

A GOOD BUSINESS was done at Niblo's Garden the past week with "The Poor of New York." The changes in the cast proved quite satisfactory. Mark Bates making an excellent Badger, Henry Dalton acting Paul Fairweather in a gentlemanly and unaffected manner, and Harry Rowe giving an excellent portrayal of the bluff Adam Fairweather.

"BABY" is to be withdrawn from the stage of the Park Theatre Aug. 25. Those who have not as yet seen the precocious child should by no means neglect the remaining opportunities for doing so. Miss Minnie Doyle, who was a member of Daly's Fifth-avenue Traveling Company the past season, and who will be a member of the company at the Fifth-avenue Theatre the coming season, is at present visiting her relatives in St. Louis, Mo.

THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS are to open their season Aug. 27. The company will include Wm. Birch, D. S. Wambold, Charles Backus, Edwin French (banjoist), Bob Hart, W. H. Hamilton, H. W. Frillman, Carl Rudolph, H. M. Ricardo, Johnson and Powers, Charles Gibbons and others. W. A. Hunter will continue as treasurer.

THE VOCAL ARTISTS performing at Gilmore's Garden during the past week have included Miss Sallie Reber, Mme. Cole, C. H. Turner, W. T. Carleton. Arbuckle's cornet-solos still continue a feature in each evening's programme.

ALFRED EMDEN, at one time manager of the Alexandra Palace, London, Eng., arrived in the steamship Britannic Aug. 18.

"AH SIN" was played to fair business at the Fifth-avenue Theatre the past week. The present week will be the last save one of its run. The authors of the piece are to have a benefit Aug. 31, and C. T. Parsloe will be similarly complimented Sept. 1.

W. F. CODY, better known as Buffalo Bill, is to arrive in town Aug. 22, bringing with him an Indian chief called "The Man-who-carries-the-sword," also a Sioux interpreter, both of whom are said to have been in the Custer massacre, and to have surrendered with Crazy Horse. They are to appear with Buffalo Bill at the Bowery Theatre Sept. 3 in his new drama, entitled "Viva Vance," in which two horses are to be introduced on the stage.

EDWARD HARRIGAN was presented by his wife Aug. 20 with a ten-pound boy.

"OLD LAVENDER," a drama in three acts by Edward Harrigan, is to be produced at the Theatre Comique Sept. 3, and during that week there will be no-variety olio there.

"OUR CITY," a play in five acts by Augustin Daly, will inaugurate the regular season at the Fifth-avenue Theatre Sept. 4. The company will include Charles Fisher, J. B. Studley, James Lewis, W. Davidge, Maurice Barrymore, Frank Hardenberg, John Drew, Owen Fawcett, George Parkes, Frank Bennett, F. M. Chapman, W. Beekman, Mrs. G. H. Gilbert, the Misses Ada Dyas, Emily Rigl, Mary Wells, Sydney Cowell, Edith Blande, Henrietta Vaders, Amy Stuart, Eugenie Saldee Bigelow, Florence Wood, Meroe Charles, Susan Chester and Little Belle Martin. Scenic-artists, Messrs. Roberts and Charles W. Witham; leader of orchestra, C. W. Peterschen; master-machinist, Donald Mackenzie; properties, etc., Robert Cutler; prompter, E. F. Taylor; and business-manager, Stephen Fiske.

VAL VOSE, ventriloquist, who will make his American debut, the Almonte Brothers, Adams and Lee, Nellie St. John, Jennie Yeamans, Clark Gibbs and Annie Yeamans are the fresh arrivals at the Theatre Comique this week.

EGYPTIAN HALL is to be reopened Aug. 25 under the proprietorship of Col. G. W. Warren, Charles Davis manager and Geo. Atkins stage-manager, with the following company: Andy Morton, Bella Alvis, Millie Zoe, Lena Irving, Ella St. Clair, Polly Higginson, Fanny Carter, Nettie Morton, Mattie Howard, Annie Newton, Ida Florence, Lolo Zegrena, the Egyptian Art Statue Troupe, and Mlle. Marelli's Sensational Dancers, Prof. Thomas McGuire and orchestra.

THE CREMORNE GARDENS is the name of a hall for dancing about to be opened in Thirty-second street by Fred Lubin. See card.

WM. EMMETT and his wife, who is professionally known as Katie Howard, returned from Europe Aug. 20 in the steamship Wisconsin.

LILLIE ELDRIDGE has been specially engaged to appear in "The Danites" during its production at the New Broadway Theatre, this city, commencing Aug. 27.

AT THE CENTRAL PARK GARDEN, Mlle. Ninon Duclos' Troupe the present week includes Fred. and Lizzie Byron, Press Eldridge, Alyeo and Yutas (female wrestlers), Thomas and Watson, Cordi Alvis, Frankie Russell and Mme. Duclos' Statuary Troupe.

W. J. FERGUSON arrived from England Aug. 18.

JOHNNY THOMPSON had an altercation with one of the gentlemen connected with the Lydia Thompson Troupe in a hotel on Union-square on Sunday night last, in which he came off second-best, the Englishman proving himself a skillful adept in the "manly art."

To Correspondents.

All persons holding credentia's as correspondents of THE CLIPPER are requested to return them to this office for renewal on or before Sept. 1. Applicants for similar positions are respectfully requested to consider SILENCE A POLITE NEGATIVE. NO PERSON need apply for the position of TRAVELING CORRESPONDENT, as THE CLIPPER never employs any person in that capacity.

WE REGRET to announce the death, on Aug. 15, in Philadelphia, of the wife of H. W. Mitchell, who was professionally known as Miss Lizzie Pierson. She gave birth to a child on Aug. 10, which is doing well. Lizzie Pierson made her first and last appearance on the stage at the Arch-street Theatre, Philadelphia—her native city—made all her debut Nov. 29, 1870, as Pauline in "The Lady of Lyons," her final appearance Feb. 17, 1877, as Mrs. Ford in "The Merry Wives of Windsor." She was a pupil of Prof. Rufus Evans, the elocutionist, and after her most promising debut she played in Baltimore, under John T. Ford's management, where she met and married H. W. Mitchell, a well-known actor. She afterwards filled engagements throughout the country, returning in 1876 to Philadelphia, where she supported Miss Fanny Davenport in her very successful engagement at the Arch-street Theatre last October, appearing as Lucille Renfrew in "Pique." Her funeral took place Aug. 17 from her late residence, 2,204 Christian street, a solemn requiem mass being celebrated at St. Charles Church, and the remains being interred in Cathedral Cemetery. She was an accomplished actress and a worthy woman, and leaves many friends to mourn her demise.

THE PHILADELPHIA MUSEUM will inaugurate the Fall and Winter season of 1877-78 on Monday evening, Oct. 1. Wm. Davidge Jr.—the new manager—has, with a corps of assistants, been hard at work since we left Gotham, and with such business and managerial support as that afforded by Oofty Gooft and Edwin F. De Nyse, Knight's days and nights ought to pass very pleasantly and profitably. No, James; George Knight's "Otto" was not a Turk; it is a kind of Otto-biography. You hadn't better talk on subjects of which you know NOTHING. THE NEW PARK THEATRE, Brooklyn, L. I., is to be opened Aug. 27, for a preliminary season of two weeks, with a first-class variety company. The Lingard Combination, headed by Alice Dunning and Horace Lingard, play one week commencing Sept. 10. The regular Fall and Winter dramatic season will commence Sept. 17 with Genevieve Rogers as the star. The dramatic company includes Miss Alice Weaver, Mrs. J. J. Prior, the Misses Lulu Prior, Marie Prescott, Eliza Long and Josie Myers, Messrs. J. Leslie Goesin, Geo. R. Edeson, J. Z. Little, Chas. B. Wells, H. B. Phillips, J. B. Swinburne, Chas. Harkinson, Frank Little, Charles S. Dobson, Wm. M. Frazier, J. C. Elliott and Sami. Wright. Scenic-artist, Henry Myers; stage-carpenter, Jos. H. Thompson; engineer and gas, Jas. H. Smith; properties, Jas. Collins; treasurer, John A. Wile; manager, Jos. Wm. E. Sinn; assistant-manager, Geo. R. Edeson; leader of orchestra, A. Hinchcliffe. The stars booked for the season are Maggie Mitchell, John E. Owens, Lester Wallack, Augusta Dargon, Geo. Rignold, Hunter, Emma Leland, Lettie Foster, Marian Bent, Lizzie Payne, Marian Holcombe and Ella Warner.

THE LINGARD COMBINATION for the ensuing season will consist of the following: Wm. Horace Lingard, Alice Dunning Lingard, James M. Hardie, Edmund K. Collier, E. B. Holmes, C. B. Young, R. H. Forrest, E. F. Eberle, C. H. Hoof, Miss Nina Varian, Mrs. Isabella Preston, the Misses A. D. Grant and Agnes Lester; and Edward E. Kidder, acting and business manager.

ALL THE BUSINESS, financial and otherwise, growing out of the late partnership of Messrs. Gilson & Kennedy of the Star Comedy Company has been settled to the entire satisfaction of both parties, contrary to the contrary notwithstanding.

OLIVER DOUD BYRON plays "Across the Continent" two weeks over the New England circuit, under the management of G. W. Bishop of New York and A. E. Hathaway of New Bedford, Mass. He will be supported by a company of eighteen people, the principals being Lizzie and Minnie Maddern, Florence Glover, Ada Behan, Oliver W. Wren, E. C. McCall, Harry Colton, Frank Wright, Frank Doud, W. H. Shea, and E. Coyle; Philip S. Pentz, agent. The season opens in New Bedford Aug. 20, thence to Newport, R. I., 21; Fall River, Mass., 22, Providence, R. I., 23, Lowell, Mass., 24, Woonsocket, R. I., 27, Pittsfield, Mass., 28. A LOW COMEDIAN, heavy man, and responsible actors who can play in brass are wanted for the Crisp Sisters' Combination. Manager C. R. Forefinger begins the season at Robinson's Opera-house, Cincinnati, O., Sept. 10.

A COMPANY including R. W. Montgomery, Augustus Pitou, Robert Hill, Mrs. H. Montgomery, Mrs. Frances Palmer, and the Misses Abbie Ware and Minnie Howard gave a musical and dramatic performance at McCluskey's Park Pavilion, Bath, L. I., Aug. 14.

DE BAR'S OPERA-HOUSE, St. Louis, Mo., will be opened Aug. 27 by the Simon Kenton Combination. The regular season will commence Sept. 3, Charles Parsloe playing Ahsee.....The Olympic Theatre will be occupied Sept. 3 by Leon & Lenoir's Minstrels during the week commencing Aug. 27, and John T. Raymond inaugurates the regular season Sept. 3.....All hope of Ben De Bar's recovery has been given up. His mind is completely gone, and he is unable to do anything without assistance. The doctors say he may linger on for years in his present condition, and he may pass away suddenly. His wife and daughter are unremitting in their attendance upon him. Advices of Aug. 17.

T. G. ROTHWELL has been engaged for the first comedy at the Museum, Philadelphia, for the season commencing Oct. 1.

THE STODDART COMEDY COMPANY, under the management of Gustave Frohman, includes John Dillon, Louise Dillon, G. W. Stoddart, Anne Stoddart, Master Stoddart, Ella A. Post, Fannie Arlington, Chas. Foley, and Chas. Frohman, agent. They will open the season in Aurora, Ill., Aug. 27.

SHAKESPEARIAN ACTORS, to support Wilby Frampton, are advertised for.

THE [illegible] COMBINATION, under the management of Abbey & Schoeffel, is to start on a tour at the Walnut-street Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 27. The company and cast will be as follow: Willie St. Paul, J. W. Collier; Howard St. Paul, W. H. Bailey; Mrs. Howard St. Paul, Mrs. Oliver Magnus, T. B. MacDonough; Mrs. Oliver Magnus, Miss Alice Wyndham; Tracy Coach, W. J. Lemoyne; Charles Atkins, J. T. Kennedy; Hairdresser, D. A. West; John, Alex. Westbury; Susan, Sadie Vivian; Mme. Aurelia, Rose Lyle.

AUGUSTA SOHLKE, ballet-mistress and danseuse, whose address find in another column, can be engaged for open dates.

THE DRAMATIC COMPANY to support E. T. Stetson, and a working agent, are wanted for the Fall and Winter season, commencing Sept. 13. Address Edwin Clifford, as per advertisement. Mr. Clifford would also like to hear from comp'nies of opera-houses and halls in regard to terms or rental.

NUGENT & O'BRIEN'S COMEDY COMPANY performed in Pataskala, O., the past week, and is billed in Marysville 20 to 27, Woodstock 27 to Sept. 3, Mechanicburg Sept. 3 to 10 (if fair week), West Liberty 10 to 17, De Graff 17 to 24.

THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE, Indianapolis, Ind., is to open for the regular season Sept. 10 with the "Our Boarding-house" Combination.

THE EUCLID-AVENUE OPERA-HOUSE, Cleveland, O., was open Aug. 16, 17, the attraction being "Damon and Pythias." The first week made up of nearly all members of last year's stock, who acted the play in their usually good manner. J. E. Darling, who is here on a visit, impersonated Damon. Frank Weston, leading man for the coming season, made his first appearance in the role of Pythias, and was not unfavor

THE HOWARD ATHENÆUM, Boston, Mass., is to be opened for the season Aug. 27. During the recess the theatre has been thoroughly renovated. The old carpets have been removed, the floors thoroughly scrubbed, and new carpets laid, the iron-work of the seats has been painted a silver gray, and the chairs and railings have been upholstered in crimson plush. The proscenium boxes have been freshly painted, carpeted and upholstered. The walls have been painted white, and the frescoing, gilding, etc., have been retouched. The aisles on each side of the parquet have been widened, and a new and broad aisle has been made in the westerly section of the parquet. Two gallery entrances—one either side of the principal entrance—have been constructed, and a new ticket-office has been put in the easterly entrance. The main stage-entrance is now on the easterly side.

HARRY MILLER died of consumption in Philadelphia, Pa., recently, aged 30 years. His remains were buried in Mount Moriah Cemetery. He was the husband of the lady professionally known as Lestie Carle, and for a long time he held the position of stage-manager at the Washington Varieties, Providence, R. I., under Archie Stalker's management.

THE BIG FOUR—Smith, Waldron, Morton and Master Martin—now performing at the Theatre Comique, this city, in their specialty entitled "Wonders," can be addressed for dates as per card. They open with Emerson's Minstrels in San Francisco, Cal., Sept. 3, and they desire to thank managers for offers of engagements, which they are at present unable to accept.

THE ROYAL JAPANESE TROUPE are enjoying a month's vacation in London, Ont.

DR. S. M. LANDIS opens in "Dick Shaw" and "Richard III" at Trimble's Varieties, Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 27, where managers can address him.

A COSY little hall was opened in Fort Wayne, Ind., the past week, under the management of Charles Shoub, and named the City Garden Theatre. The following people appeared: Tom and Annie Dayton, Chas. Devere, N. B. Waide, Ella Jewett, H. Carroll and Little Pearl. Business good.

FROM CINCINNATI, O., we are advised to Aug. 17 by our correspondent as appended: "Heuck's Opera-house presented this week the following new people: The Rixford Brothers, who appeared in a very acceptable parlor gymnasic act; Fostelle, whose female impersonations have taken well; and Frank Mayo, a clever Ethiopian comedian. The burlesque of 'Pocahontas' was the concluding feature of the programme, and was cleverly rendered, the Smith of Lucy Adams and Powhatan of James Douglas being noteworthy. Business large. Departures 19: Sig. R. Abecco, to travel with Com. Nutt's Combination, and the Fieldings, to Cleveland. Arrivals 19: Charles Gardner, Charles Diamond, Miss Murio, and Prof. Parker and dogs.....The Cory Sisters, Allie May, Billy and Maggie Ray, Sam Dearin and Ida Dearin were the new specialty people at Shickling's Academy of Music. The Cory Sisters left on Monday and went to Wood's Theatre. Sam Dearin's musical act and the plantation sketches of the Rays took well. Misses May and Dearin gave serio-comic songs fairly. Business middling. Wood's Theatre: Business was opened Monday, under the management of Charles McDonald, with Con. T. Murphy as stage-manager and Prof. C. Ludeke as leader of orchestra. The company differed considerably from the one originally announced, embracing the Cory Sisters, neat serio-comics; Levanion and Negrino on the horizontal-bar and flying-rigs, in which they were good; Goss and Fox, whose plantation sketches were taking; Maud De Lisle, a nice little vocalist; Rosa Celeste on the tight-rope; La Belle Estelle, who is a capital dancer and a fair singer; Johnny Whitney and Charles Young, funny comedians; the Mendels and Charles H. King in Dutch sketches; Dora Dawron, double-voiced vocalist; and Frankie Sidney, balladist. Departures: The Mendels and Charles H. King, for the Metropolitan, Louisville; Levanion and Negrino, and Rosa Celeste. Arrivals 20: The Hamilton Sisters, Johnny Pierce, Fisher and Payne, and Billy and Minnie Kaye.....The National will reopen Monday. The new drop-curtain representing a view in Venice, and a credit to the artist, Mr. Locke. The opening company will be the same as announced last week, dropping Murphy and Shannon and substituting Joe Norton.....The Eldorado was 'pulled' last Saturday and Sunday nights, successively, the performance and some of the spectators being taken on the second evening. The proprietor was charged with exhibiting without a license, but the arrest of the others was unjustifiable. However, the performers claim the whole affair, as far as they are concerned, to have amounted merely to a series of cells. The matter in the end was amicably arranged with the Police-commissioners, a license was issued to the proprietor, the cases were all dismissed, and the company is in ex-cell-ent form. Ned Reed joins 18.....The alterations of the Coliseum, which reopens Sept. 22, are being rapidly pushed."

AT ENOCHS' VARIETIES, Philadelphia, Mlle. Zoe, gymnast, was the only new face during the past week. Manager Enochs had a large attendance at his complimentary benefit, Aug. 17, and the theatre closed the following evening, to be re-opened Sept. 3.

J. J. RILEY and Lizzie Smith in the sensational sketch "Si Salem" were the new faces at the Adelphi Theatre, Philadelphia, on Aug. 13. Jas. and Katie Edwards and Nellie and Charles Leslie open Aug. 20.

MILLER'S WINTER GARDEN, Philadelphia, received its usual liberal share of patronage during the week ending Aug. 18, Miss Vic Reynolds in serio-comic songs, McVicker and Burke in Irish specialties, Miss Allie Lamont in ballads, and the Gorman Brothers in songs-and-dances being the new appearances. Miss Annie Hughes, May Hamilton, Maggie Christy, Maud Palmer and Ella Sheldon open here Aug. 20. The regular Fall and Winter season will commence Sept. 10, George Kurtz continuing as manager.

MISS ELOISE ALLEN in ballads was the only new face at Dougherty's Alhambra Palace, Philadelphia, last week, the minstrel season being discontinued Aug. 18, the occasion of a complimentary benefit tendered to Hughey Dougherty. Among the volunteers were Mlle. De Rosa, Billy Carroll and Robert Fraser. The attendance was very good. The Caron & Freire Franco-Brazilian Combination commence Aug. 20.

THE PHILADELPHIA VARIETIES, Philadelphia, was well attended last week, an excellent entertainment being given with Ida Clifford, Lottie La Ray, Bessie Lee and Claude Lorraine as the new arrivals. Tony Smith closed Aug. 18. The new faces announced for Aug. 20 are Fannie Howard, Ida Keating, Lizzie Pope, Jennie Smith, Ned Wilson and Jenny Etcherly. Talent is advertised for.

THE METROPOLITAN THEATRE, Louisville, Ky., now under the management of Messrs. Whalen & Cole, was opened for the season on Monday evening, Aug. 13. The new managers have made many needed improvements in and about the theatre. A drop-curtain, representing a Swiss mountain scene, and an entire new stock of scenery, have been painted by D. Eily, the scenic-artist of the establishment; the upholstery and properties are also entirely new. The managers announce that they intend to conduct the Metropolitan in a first-class manner. No smoking will be permitted in the auditorium, and there will be no wine-room connected with the establishment. The entertainment will be conducted under the stage-management of Ed. Chrissie, an old favorite here. The house on the opening-night was crowded, and the performers met with enthusiastic receptions. A very perceptible diminution took place in the size of the audiences after the opening night, caused by the warm weather and counter outdoor attractions. The opening company consisted in part of Signor Fabra, Turner Brothers, Mlle. Leoni, James Le Claire, Minnie Gray, Monk, Bushnell, Frank Jones, Ed. Chrissie, J. R. Weaver, Alice Montague and J. Arthur Doty. Signor Fabra's magic performances were well received; the Turner Brothers appeared in Irish songs-and-dances, which were only fair; Mlle. Leoni and James Le Claire's trapeze act was one of the best features of the performance; the lightning songs-and-dances of Minnie Gray were only fair—her voice is strong and melodious, but her dancing is hardly so praiseworthy; the jugglery of Monk Bushnell was fine. The performance terminated with a sensational drama entitled "Black Hand," in which Ed. Chrissie, Frank Jones, Alice Montague and J. R. Weaver were seen to advantage. The departures on the 18th are Signor Fabra, to New York; Frank Jones, Alice Montague and J. R. Weaver, to St. Louis. The Mendels, King and Doty, and Letha Weber are billed for the 20th. Letter dated Aug. 20.

TONY PASTOR'S TROUPE is billed for St. Joseph, Mo., Aug. 20, Kansas City 21, Quincy, Ill., 22, Bloomington 23, Decatur 24, Lafayette, Ind., 25, Indianapolis 26, Louisville, Ky., 28, 29, Columbus, O., 30, Pittsburg, Pa., 31, Sept. 1.

AT TRIMBLE'S VARIETIES, Pittsburg, Pa., the regular season begins Aug. 18 under the management of H. W. Williams. The company is as follows: Maud Pearl, Etzeline Sisters, Lyle Sisters, Cora Leigh, Harry Kennedy, Thomas E. Jackson, Manchester and Jennings, Joe Lang, Huber and Glidden, Dan Oakes, the Lentons, Griffith Morgan, H.W. Williams and Lucy Clifton.

BOYD'S COMBINATION played a week, ending Aug. 11, at Toronto (Ont.) Horticultural Garden, and gave two performances in the Royal Opera-house, that city, Aug. 13 (civic holiday), all to good business.

MISS ADAH RICHMOND has formed a talented burlesque company for a tour of the country the coming season, which includes—besides herself, a popular favorite in the principal cities—Miss Pauline Markham, who reappears on the American stage after an absence of three years; Miss Rose Temple, the Foy Sisters—Bertha and Ida —Miss Susie Parker, Miss Julia Emmons, Mose Fiske, W. P. Sheldon, J. H. Jones, Wm. Scallon, Harry Fisher, C. W. Allinson, and Sam Fisher. Prof. Zaulig is musical director and A. S. Pennoyer business-manager. The burlesques to be played, which are all new, are "Chow Chow," "The Golden Butterfly," "The Three Mus-kee-dears," and "A New Mazeppa." They are to open the season in New Haven, Ct., Sept. 1, playing there 3, thence to Hartford 4, 5, Springfield, Mass., 6, Worcester 7, 8, Newark, N. J., 10, Easton, Pa., 11, Wilkesbarre 12, Scranton 13, Reading 14, Harrisburg 15, Pittsburg 17, one week.

AT THE VOLKS' GARDEN, Brooklyn, N. Y., the company for week commencing Aug. 20 includes the Æolian Quartet, comprising Frank Green, Al Henderson, Frank White and Chas. Campbell, and Billy West, Johnny Manning, Lottie Brown, McDermott Sisters, Williams Sisters, Dave Oaks, E. D. Gooding, Otta Volger and Dick Willis.

A LIGHT COMEDIAN, first violinist, musical specialty artist, ventriloquist and others are wanted by M. L. Sutton, who advertises.

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

HAVERLY'S MINSTRELS commenced a two weeks' engagement at the Arch street Theatre, Philadelphia, Aug. 13, presenting a capital programme, including as noteworthy features the ballad-singing of Thos. B. Dixon and Chas. Heywood, and the witticisms of Billy Rice and Geo. Wilson on the ends in the first-part, Ad. Ryman's capital stump-speech "Reform or Perish," Billy Carter's banjo-solos, Bobby Newcomb's songs-and-dances, George Wilson's specialties, and the very amusing concluding burlesque "Julius the Snoozer." The attendance was fair during the week. Frank Moran and George Thatcher will be added to the company Aug. 20, taking the places on the ends occupied heretofore by Billy Rice and Geo. Wilson, who have joined other companies.

A BONE-PLAYER and comedian desires an engagement to learn the minstrel or variety business. See J. E. G.'s card.

THE MEMBERS of Carncross & Dixey's Minstrels are requested to assemble on Aug. 27. The season opens Sept. 3. See advertisement.

J. D. BURBRIDGE'S latest stump-speeches are advertised elsewhere.

THE CALIFORNIA MINSTRELS—Chas. Sutton and Levino Brothers, proprietors and managers—are now en route for the East, and were billed to perform in Tolona, Ill., Aug. 13, 14, Danville 14, 15, Lafayette, 16, 17. Bernardo is one of the attractions of the company. M. J. Hyde is advance-agent.

DUPREZ & BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS are reorganizing for the coming season, and Manager Chas. H. Duprez advertises for all kinds of minstrel talent.

KELLY & LEON'S MINSTRELS play at the Olympic, St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 27, and during the week, Detroit, Mich., Sept. 3.

CARNCROSS & DIXEY'S MINSTRELS will reopen their Eleventh-street Opera-house, Philadelphia, on Sept. 3. Their company will be a strong one, including many new faces, and with Matt Wheeler and Jack Talbot on the ends.

SIMMONS, SLOCUM & SWEATNAM'S MINSTRELS will inaugurate their Fall and Winter season at the Arch-street Opera-house, Philadelphia, Aug. 27.

BOYD AND WADE did not close their engagement with Haverly's New Orleans Minstrels, as they intended, inducements having been offered them to remain a few weeks longer. The company performed in Mognoteka Aug. 13, De Witt 14, Tipton 15, Rochester, Ill., 16, Sycamore 17, De Kalb 18, and is billed in Elgin 20, Janesville, Wis., 22.

HARRY ROBINSON'S MINSTRELS showed in Port Huron, Mich., Aug 14, Flint 15, Lansing 16, Jackson 17, Toledo 18, Adrian 20.

MADAME RENTZ'S MINSTRELS open their season in Danbury, Ct., Aug. 27, going thence to Bridgeport 28, Ansonia 29, Waterbury 30, Hartford 31, Springfield, Mass., Sept. 1, Worcester 3, Brockton 4, Fall River 5, Providence 6, 7.

HAVERLY'S MINSTRELS have been meeting with success through the Eastern States, as will be seen by the appended notices:

HAVERLY'S MINSTRELS.—The Opera-house was packed last evening to see Haverly's Minstrels, who obtained an unparalleled patronage in this city last Winter, and fairly made minstrel-going respectable. The company which appeared at the opera-house last night under the same management is almost entirely different in its composition from last Winter's; but the standard of excellence is maintained, and even raised. The objectionable features of many minstrel companies are avoided, and the fun and music are all of a high order. The stump-speech of Ryman is unique in its way; and such a combination of comedians as Newcomb, Ryman, Thatcher, Rice and Carter is seldom found.—Springfield Republican, Aug. 9, 1877.

PROVIDENCE OPERA-HOUSE.—HAVERLY'S MINSTRELS. The shower of last evening apparently kept nobody away from the entertainment at the Opera house. The Haverly Minstrels, who have made their popularity in this city a "foregone conclusion" by previous visits, gave the first performance of their very short season, and of course the house was filled. An entirely new organization appeared under the old and popular name, and the audience familiar with the excellence of the former company that we hardly expected that it would be equaled; but it was fully up to the standard, and in many features superior. Its vocal chorus and band are especially good, and the entire first-part was of the highest order of minstrelsy. In the second-part "Julius the Snoozer," by Billy Rice and Ad. Ryman, one of the most amusing pieces of the kind ever seen, and George Thatcher was not only very funny, but absolutely unique. Mr. Billy Carter is a very capital banjoist, and Add Ryman gave a new effect to the hackneyed burlesque speech. Newcomb is a very good dancer; and it may be said, as of the Irish people, "Those who think with the heels of him and dance with the head of him, then were he a blessed spirit." This afternoon and evening there will be performances with an entire change of programme, and in the evening the very amusing farce of "Julius the Snoozer" will be given.—Providence Journal, Aug. 10.

CIRCUSES.

VAN AMBURGH & CO.'S CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE is billed for Cadiz, O., Aug. 23.

FRED O'BRIEN, leaper and gymnast, and his wife and children and other members of Howes' London Circus, are thus noticed by The Albany Express: "There was fair riding by Messrs. Melville and Dockrill, and Miss Dockrill did ride four horses, as advertised to do, and proved herself entitled to the title of 'Empress of the Arena,' for she certainly did the most reckless, daring, and risky that was ever done by a woman. Her acts were received with round after round of applause, and it is safe to say that she has no equal among female equestrians, and that there are very few who can excel her. The O'Brien Family, consisting of Fred O'Brien, the leaper and gymnast, his wife, the slack-wire walker, and their two children, trapeze performers, all did their work in splendid style, and proved themselves to be a wonderful family."

RIDERS, gymnasts and specialty performers, also a band, are wanted for the Great Southern Show—C. W. Noyes, manager—which is to leave Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 1. Privileges are also advertised to let.

CHARLEY WHITNEY, the well-known press-agent, returned to Philadelphia Aug. 13 for a brief vacation. He severed his connection with Forepaugh's Circus at Yankton, Dacotah Territory, having accepted a position at the Coliseum, Chicago, for the Fall and Winter season.

W. R. HAYDEN, general manager of Cole's Circus, was in Philadelphia last week.

HARRY C. HEAD is requested to send his address to this office without delay.

CIRCUS PERFORMERS in all branches of the business, living curiosities, animals, etc., are wanted by Cooper, Bailey & Co., who advertise.

HOWES' LONDON CIRCUS exhibited in Toronto, Ont., Aug. 17, 18, to large business. Route: Belleville 20, Port Hope 21, Lindsay 22, Peterboro 23, Oshawa 24, Guelph 25, Stratford 27, London 28, Chatham 29, Woodstock 30, Brantford 31, St. Catherines Sept. 1.

P. T. BARNUM'S SHOW will be in St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 20, for one week.

MURRAY'S CIRCUS showed in Providence, R. I., Aug. 17, to a fair audience.

W. W. COLE'S CIRCUS exhibited in Cleveland, O., Aug. 13, 14, and is billed in Kittaning, Pa., Sept. 1, 3, Rochester 4, Steubenville, O., 5, Wheeling, W. Va., 6, Bell Air, O., 7.

MONTGOMERY QUEEN'S CIRCUS was not so well attended at Detroit, Mich., Aug. 14, 15, as the performance warranted, too much excitement over the regatta and other attractions being the cause.

THE MIRROR DRAMATIC ASSOCIATION of Philadelphia have secured a lease for a term of years of a hall on Seventh street, below Poplar, which will be fitted up and opened Sept. 27. The Association will give a performance every Thursday evening during the season.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

DRAMATIC.

THE ROYAL DRAMATIC COLLEGE.—Financially, this British theatrical institution is, we regret to state, in a very shaky condition. Recently ill-advised steps have been taken to better its fortunes, the first effort being to induce the "merchant princes" of the metropolis, through the persuasive arguments of a good-natured Lord-mayor, to subscribe a sufficient amount of the needful to establish the institution upon a solid basis; but the moneyed men refused to shell out extensively, only a few pounds being realized. Then the members of F. B. Chatterton's company and a few other professionals, including a sprinkling of variety performers, aided by professional athletes, projected a "Royal Dramatic Fete," to consist of stage performances and outdoor sports, which took place at Lillie-bridge Grounds Aug. 2, 3, 4, but proved a lamentable failure, a doubt existing as to whether expenses were paid. The programme was not carried out, the advertised foot-race, in which Benjamin Webster and other veterans were to take part, "a "Donkey Derby," with actors as jockeys, boxing and polo matches, not taking place at all, thereby causing intense dissatisfaction. The profession in general bitterly denounce these attempts to raise funds by means discreditable to the stage, and in a communication to The Era, which is signed by many prominent actors and actresses, we find the following: "We are further desirous of expressing the opinion—an opinion which we believe to be shared by the profession generally—that the Royal Dramatic College, after a protracted trial, has been proved a failure; that the great majority of actors and actresses do not believe in it; that to support it, or to attempt to support it, by 'professional begging,' or the buffoonery of dramatic fetes, is degrading to the art which we follow, and whose best interests we are bound to protect; that in our opinion it must fall in the future as it has failed in the past; and that the wisest plan to adopt would be that recently resolved upon by the principal members of the late Council, viz., to realize the property, and to grant annuities to the inmates from the proceeds of the sale."

MISS ANNIE LAFONTAINE, the London actress who some time ago was married to Henry Graves, was to have taken her farewell of the stage Aug. 11 at the Haymarket Theatre.

HENRY IRVING took a benefit at the Lyceum Theatre, London, July 30 (the closing night of the season), when he appeared as Hamlet. The Dean of Westminster occupied a box. The theatre will shortly reopen with a new play, founded on Wilkie Collins' "Dead Secret."

MISS NELLY FARREN has completely recovered from her recent dangerous illness, and made her reappearance before the public at the Gaiety Theatre, London, July 30. She had a great reception, and the aid of two stage attendants had to be called into requisition to carry off the avalanche of bouquets.

"LONDON ASSURANCE" received its one hundred and tenth consecutive representation at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, London, July 27, when the establishment was closed for the season, as was also the Strand.

MRS. JOHN WOOD and Mrs. George Honey will probably join the Haymarket company, London, during the Fall. "Brass" was produced at this theatre Aug. 14.

MME. CELESTE is to reappear upon the boards, assuming the part of Fenella in the Wills-Scott play at Drury-lane, London.

CHAS. WYNDHAM'S "Pot à Dominos" Company was playing at last advices at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, Edinburgh, Scotland.

"THE SCUTTLED SHIP" has been revived for three weeks at the Standard Theatre, London.

THE CHILDREN'S PANTOMIME "Little Red Riding Hood" now forms an attractive feature of the performances at the Adelphi Theatre, London, where "The Streets of London" was shortly to be shelved.

MUSICAL.

THOMAS SPRAKE, musician, for many years connected with Chas. Hengler's Circus Company, died of consumption at Dublin, Ireland, July 31.

THE DEATH of the baritone Nicola Bandini, at Naples, Italy, by suicide, and that of Prof. Cesare Ciardi, at St. Petersburg, Russia, are announced.

M. WANOT, chef of the Opera Comique, and father of the tenor of that name, is dead.

THE CARL ROSA OPERA TOUR commenced at Dublin, Ireland, Aug. 6, and will continue until the end of January. Mr. Betjeman will assist Mr. Rosa as conductor on the tour. In January the company, considerably strengthened, will return to London for a twelve weeks' season at a theatre which has not yet been decided upon.

MME. MONTESSU, the celebrated dancer, who created at the Paris Opera "Manon Lescaut," the "Somnambule," and "Le Diable Boiteux," is dead. She was the sister of Paul, surnamed the Aerian, a dancer of equal celebrity, who introduced various innovations in the modern ballet.

THE celebrated pianist and composer Antoine Rubinstein, was married in 1869 with the Cross of Saint Vladimir of the fourth class, has received a hereditary title of Russian nobility, at the request of the Grand Duchess Catherine Mikhailovna, Duchess-dowager of Mecklenburg-Strelitz.

GIUSEPPE MARIA LUZI, a well-known impressario of Naples, Italy, has just died of congestion of the brain.

HERR WILHELMJ is said to be still very ill.

GENOVA the music-publisher died recently at Palermo, Italy.

TICHATSCHEK, the famous tenor, celebrated, at Dresden, Germany, July 12, the seventieth anniversary of his birth.

THE SEASON of the two Italian opera-houses in London is at an end. At both theatres the campaign is said to have been disastrous for the speculators in stalls and boxes.

M. MAUREL has been engaged for Messrs. Gatti's promenade concert at Covent-garden, London, making his first appearance Sept. 22.

MME. ADELINA PATTI, says Galignani's Messenger, has paid M. Escudier, manager of the Italian Theatre in Paris, 100,000f. as forfeit for the breach of engagement. She has also telegraphed to M. Strakosch of New York to say that she has accepted his proposals for the United States, namely, 1,000f. for each performance and a benefit—fifty-one performances guaranteed at more than half million francs.

ANNIE JEWELL.
In reply to a card from Frank Howard, manager of the Vaudeville Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, I would state, for the benefit of my many friends, both in and out of the profession, that I did jump his place, and for this reason: I am no dance-hall woman, and do not wish to become one.
To my friends I would say that, if they wish to hold an engagement at Mr. Howard's theatre, they must not only do their business on the stage and in the wine-room, but are forced to dance in the hall until daylight in the morning. This sort of business did not suit me; so, in order to get my week's salary, I did rehearse for that evening's performance the same day I left. I am now engaged at the Green-front Theatre, and have been here ever since leaving the employ of Mr. Howard. In regard to the truth of the above, I refer to any of the performers in this city.
Respectfully,
ANNIE JEWELL,
San Antonio, Bexar Co., Texas.
